ONE OF WASHINGTON'S INSTITUTIONS SUDDENLY LEAVES TOWN

Louis Ludlow, "Best Known Newspaper Man" at National Capital, Takes First Vacation in Twenty-one Years, Leaving Friends Aghast

By CARL D. RUTH

ALL prophecies have failed and an incredible thing has come to pass—Louis Ludlow, Washington correspondent of the Columbus Dispatch, has broken his non-stop record of 21 years at the national capital and gone on a vacation.

Louis Ludlow

For the three hundred or more Washington newspaper men who know and esteem Louis Ludlow, his departure for Connersville, Ind., is a momentous event. Month after month, year in and year out, they have seen him come and go about the Capitol, the White House and the treasury, until they came to associate the clock-like regularity of his movements with the uninterrupted performance of the government itself.

Day and night, Sundays, week days and holidays for more than two decades, Louis Ludlow has made his rounds. Presidents have come and gone, but he has gone on with never a stop or a hitch. His tall, friendly figure—slightly stooped—has been daily familiar to cabinet members, bureau chiefs, senators and representatives. The idea that he would ever stop or pause seemed as absurd as that the tides would take a rest.

All of which is merely a roundabout manner of saying that Louis Ludlow is far more than a veteran newspaper correspondent or a mere member of the press gallery at the Capitol. He is an institution. His fame extends into all the governmental circles. He is personally known by more public men than any other newspaper man in Washington. And his unfailing good humor, indefatigable energy, keen sense of news values and generous helpfulness have earned for him an affectionate regard among his colleagues of the press that has no parallel.

As a newspaper writer, Louis Ludlow is admittedly in a class by himself. Aside from being an all-round reporter of exceptional ability, he has a quaint Hoosier humor which sparkles in everything he writes.

Just thirty years ago, Louis Ludlow, then 19 years old, arrived in the city of Indianapolis. He was fresh from his father's farm, near Connersville, where the log cabin in which he was born still stands, and he looked the part.

He was lank and awkward. All he had except the ill-fitting store clothes he wore was $1.96 and the determination to become a newspaper man.

At the office of the Indianapolis Sentinel, long since deceased, a managing editor who thought he detected a latent talent tried him out on an assignment which the youth covered so well that he was hired at what, to him, seemed the princely salary of $10 a week.

During the eleven years of his service on the Sentinel and other Indianapolis papers, Louis Ludlow developed into one of the best-known news writers in Indiana.

Once, yielding to the insatiable ambition that comes at least once to every red-blooded newspaper man, he set out for New York City. Every day for nearly two weeks he called futilely at the office of every metropolitan daily.

When exhaustion of his meager funds brought him finally to the starvation point, he decided upon heroic measures. He called upon Benjamin Harrison, who had come to New York to practice law after leaving the Presidency. If Harrison would grant him an interview, he thought he might sell it to some city editor and thus get a start or at least stave off hunger for a few days more.

But Harrison, though he too was a Hoosier, turned Ludlow down. So did Dr. Charles Parkhurst, the famous Presbyterian preacher, whom he sought next.

The situation was getting desperate when Ludlow happened to remember that Robert G. Ingersoll, the famous orator and agnostic, was then practicing law in New York. So he called at Ingersoll's office and after a long wait in an anteroom was finally ushered into the great man's presence.

Ingersoll listened sympathetically while the Indiana youth told of his plight and asked for an interview.

"Well," said Ingersoll, "you write out your questions. I'll take them with me when I leave the city tomorrow and bring them answered when I return next Tuesday."

Ludlow, overjoyed, wrote out a long list of questions.

He managed to survive the intervening days until Ingersoll handed him a ponderous manuscript in which his questions, carefully copied, were answered in the elegant rhetoric of that master of language.

Ludlow, after making a copy in order that he might retain the original as a souvenir, sold the interview for $20 to the New York Herald. That paper, after taking great pains to confirm it as authentic, featured it in its Sunday edition.

The interview aroused nation-wide interest and later was incorporated in Ingersoll biographies. However, Ludlow was given little credit and after a few weeks as reporter for a local news association he was able to save enough money to pay his room rent and buy a ticket back to Indianapolis.

But the desire for larger opportunities would not down and after a few years more with Indianapolis papers, he prevailed upon Samuel Morse, publisher of the Sentinel, to send him to Washington as special correspondent.

That was in 1901, not long after the assassination of President McKinley. Shortly thereafter the Sentinel "blew up" but already Ludlow had made such a reputation that the Indianapolis Star immediately grabbed him and before long he was writing for a whole string of Indiana newspapers.

Thus started Louis Ludlow's Washington career—a career rich in achievements and friendships that any newspaper man might envy.

On his personal side, Louis Ludlow is a man of such modesty, refreshing wholesomeness, and self-effacing generosity that he is universally beloved. His home life is ideal. He scored his greatest beat when, during the absence of Mr. Morse in Europe, he scooped his own publisher by wooing and winning the latter's secretary, Miss Katherine Huber. They have three daughters—Margery, now Mrs. Elmer L. Kayser, whose husband is secretary of George Washington University and professor of history; Blanche, now the wife of Ensign Ralph H. Hudson, of the U. S. navy, a Columbus boy; and Virginia, in her junior year at high school, affectionately called "Peaches." There is one son, Louis, youngest of the four.

Springfield Union Sued

The Springfield (Mass.) Union Publishing Company has been sued for $10,000 in action of tort, by Edwin K. McPeck, clerk of the Adams, Mass., district court. The plaintiff alleges that on Sept. 11, the Springfield Union published a libelous article concerning the issuing of a warrant in the case of Rev. Joseph Walker, aged Windsor, Mass., minister, whom a young girl of his parish accused of being the father of her child.

HOWELLS GETS TRIBUNE BUILDING PRIZE

Wins $50,000—Will Be Architect of Chicago Tribune Tower—150 Artists from 20 Countries Entered Designs

The Chicago Tribune first prize of $50,000 for the architect's design for the paper's new building was awarded December 2 to John Mead Howells, the New York architect and son of the late William Dean Howells, the novelist. The building will cost $7,000,000 to erect, and it will be known as the Tribune Tower. Raymond M. Hood, of New York, was associated with Mr. Howells in the preparation of the winning design.

The style of the new building will be a Gothic expression of the American sky-scraper theme, an expression of the fundamental structure of the theme, a steel cage. It will be constructed of a light colored stone. Mr. Howells in addition to winning the first prize becomes the architect for the new structure.

The second prize of $20,000 was awarded to Eliel Saarinen of Helsingfors, Finland, winner of the second prize for peace palace at the Hague, Holland. Dwight G. Wallace and Bertell Grenana of Chicago were associated with him.

The winner of the third prize, $10,000, was the Chicago architectural firm of William Holabird & Martin Roche.

The remainder of the $100,000 offered by the Chicago Tribune for this architectural contest goes in $2,000 allottments to 10 American architects. Nearly 150 designs were submitted by architects representing 20 nationalities including Australia, Japan, Austria, Luxembourg, Belgium, Mexico, Canada, Norway, Cuba, England, Finland, France, Germany, Holland, Italy, Poland, Scotland, Serbia, Switzerland and the United States.

The site of the building at 431 to 439 North Michigan avenue is nearly square, 100 by 135 feet and is open on all four sides. This feature Mr. Howells utilized boldly in his design with a result that is both towering and militant.

The great entrance will be flush with the boulevard. To the embattled chapel which tops the tower the distance is 400 feet. There are colossal flying buttresses which—both literally and spiritually—are the supreme note of the structure.

"Best of all," said the Tribune in announcing decision of the jury of award, "Mr. Howells, by the combined dignity and spirituality of his conception, has done something that will lift our new home out of the category of commercial profit makers and will make it an ornament and an inspiration to the city we love.

"It is illuminating to read the earnest words with which he couples his architectural ideal with the Tribune's journalistic ideal of battle and of service. Speaking for himself and his colleague, Mr. Hood, he says, in part:

" 'The design is before everything else an expression of the Chicago Tribune. The structure is carried to its full height as a square on the Michigan avenue front only, thus always given the same impression from wherever seen, and showing the same from all points as the Tribune landmark.

" 'We feel, that in this design, we have produced a unit. It is not a tower or top, placed on a building—it is all one building. It is perhaps not necessary to call attention to the fact that the upper part of the building has been designed not only for its own outline and composition but for the possibilities of illumination and reflected lighting at night.' "

All the designs submitted have been on exhibition at the Lake Shore Trust & Savings Bank Building during the past week. Later they will travel to five centers of architectural instruction in the United States, Harvard University, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, the New York School of Architecture, the Architectural School, the University of Pennsylvania and the Pittsburgh School of Architecture.

The Tribune gave a dinner Dece 3 to celebrate the award. City off and architects attended as well as journalists. Mr. Howells spoke stressed the necessity for beauty in a tecture.

Mr. Howells is 54 years old and born in Cambridge, Mass., when father was the editor of the Atl Monthly. In 1907 he married Abby Dougall White, daughter of Ho White, one time editor-in-chief and p dent of the New York Evening He is a member of the American I tute of Architects and the American stitute of Arts and Letters, and presi of the New York Society of Diplor Architects, Paris.

UNION WOULDN'T PRINT DISABLED PAPER

Pressmen on Wilmington Star Demanded That Dispatch Renew Contract with I. P. P. & A. U. When Press Breaks

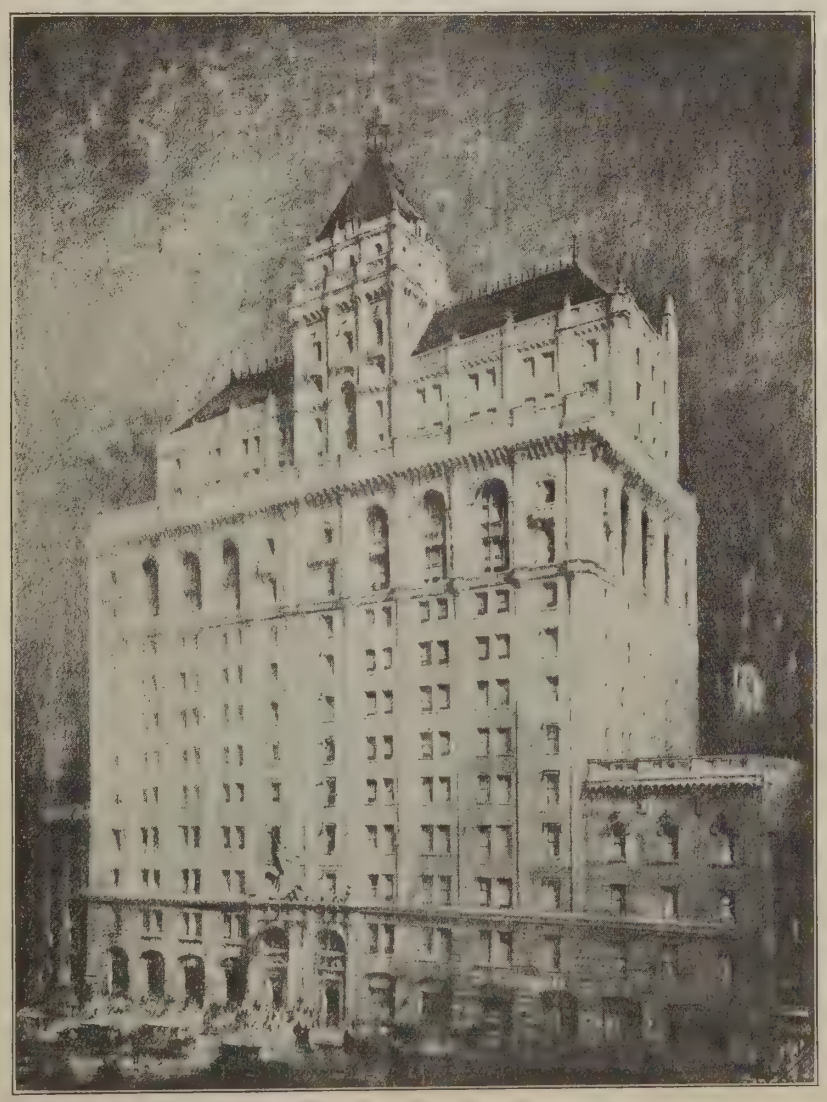
Union pressmen on the Wilmington (N. C.) Star refused last week to print an issue of the Wilmington Dispatch, when the latter's press was disabled by the breaking of two gears. The Dispatch has been non-union in its pressroom since August 1 and in its composing room since November 1. The Star's management offered its facilities to the Dispatch and its union pressmen agreed to print the paper, until the local typographical union employees of the Star brought pressure to bear on the pressmen. Then notice was served on the Dispatch that the Star workmen would not print the non-union Dispatch unless it would sign a contract with the pressmen's union identical with the one which was broken last August.

At that time the Dispatch pressmen and assistant walked out on orders of the local union, on the ground that the Dispatch had abrogated the contract by asking its press employees fo do certain work in connection with the mailing of the paper. The Dispatch then suspended publication for two days and employed two non-union pressmen. When it employed non-union compositors a month ago, one of its non-union pressmen quit without notice on the night of the change, was re-instated in the pressmen's union and left the city.

Pending repairs on its press, the Dispatch is issuing a two-page paper without advertising. Its issues of November 29 and 30 were combined.

SYRACUSE HEARST MEN DINE

Telegram and Sunday American Staffs at First Gathering



The employees of the Syracuse (N. Y.) Evening Telegram and Sunday American had their first get-together dinner at the Elks' Club December 4. This was the first gathering of the personnel of this Hearst paper since it started about 10 weeks ago. James M. Lynch, former State Industrial Commissioner and ex-president of the International Typographical Union was the chief speaker. Among the other speakers were James A. Easton, publisher of the Telegram and Sunday American; Thomas Corcoran, president, the Syracuse Typographical Union; Thomas M. Gafney, the Industrial Weekly; Florence J. McCarthy, manager editor, the New York Sunday American; L. R. Murdock, managing editor, the Boston Advertiser and department heads on the Telegram and Sunday American.

A message from Mr. Hearst complimenting the mechanical department was read during the dinner. In it he stated that he was getting modern and adequate machinery for the new paper.

Several members of the staff of the Rochester (N. Y.) American attended the dinner and spoke. Among them were E. C. Rogers, business manager; Harry Gray, managing editor, and John A. Burk, superintendent of the composing room. Robert C. McCabe, managing editor, acted as toastmaster. He served the following notice on his staff:

"This is a short paper. Write short words, short sentences and short stories. The shorter you are the longer you'll last. The longer you are the quicker you'll go."

A. L. PERKINS IS RE-ELECTED

Texas Managing Editors' Association Meets in Galveston

Austin, Texas, Dec. 7.—The Texas Managing Editors' Association re-elected A. L. Perkins, managing editor of the Galveston Tribune, president, and E. B. Doran, the Dallas News, secretary, and selected Houston for its 1923 meeting place as the convention was closed at Galveston Tuesday.

The managing editors unanimously adopted a resolution urging changes in Texas election laws to remedy delays in official returns of primaries. Work of the Texas Election Bureau, conducted by the newspapers, was approved.

Edgar C. Cutter, superintendent of the Central Division, the Associated Press, and Ray Baumgardner, of Dallas, State correspondent of the A. P., discussed problems of the news service. Tom Finty, Jr., of the Dallas-Galveston News, declared that, as newspapers' sphere of influence is expanded, the reading public must have better education, and newspapers must take determined part in educational process. Managing editors of 35 of the leading Texas papers, members of the Associated Press, were present.

PROBE OF POSTAL COST AWAITS FUNDS

Business Conditions Have Also Delayed It Till 1923, Work Tells Congress —Dailies Got Special Care in 1922

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 7.—Increased efficiency in the handling of second-class matter in the past year as the result of closer co-operation of the Post Office Department and the publishing interests is noted by Postmaster General Work in his annual report to Congress.

"The Department has continued the policy inaugurated during the previous year of co-operation with the publishers, and the spirit of mutual helpfulness shown has resulted in the most pleasant and cordial relations," said Mr. Work.

"It is of the greatest importance to the subscriber that he receive his daily paper with promptitude and certainty, and with this in mind the Department has continued to give special attention to this class of mail, which now is moving with a regularity and expedition never before attained."

The weight of second-class matter handled in the mails was 1,168,330,902 pounds for the fiscal year ending June 30 last, or a decrease of 5.49 per cent. Postage collections amounted to $25,-140,259.53, or a decrease of 1.39 per cent. The zone rates on publications remained unchanged, and figures of the Post Office Department show that advertising parts of publications subject to zone rates mailed in the year paid postage amounting to $15,330,730.03 and weighed 422,-934,217 pounds, while the weight of reading portions of the same publications was 513,298,658 pounds, with total postage collections of $7,711,308.79.

As to the question as to whether the rates on advertising matter remained too high, the Postmaster General said:

"Undoubtedly, the increased rates have caused a considerable amount of second-class matter to be distributed through agencies other than the Postal service. This is made up in the main of bulk shipments. The actual facts of the cost can be determined only by means of a thorough and complete investigation."

Referring to the program under way by the Joint Postal Commission for determining the question of weights and costs. Mr. Work said:

"A statistical period beginning September 18, 1922, was the first selected, but on account of the condition of the mail service as well as business generally resulting from the rail and coal strikes, it was found inadvisable to proceed during that period. Because of the approach of the holiday season, it was found impracticable to select a period earlier than the beginning of the next calendar year. Furthermore, the work in the principal post offices will necessitate the employment of temporary clerks, and the completion of the work will require a large force of temporary employes in Washington. These and other items make it necessary to secure adequate appropriation to cover all the expenditures necessary to gather, tabulate and compile the data and make the final ascertainment."

PLAN POSTAL CONVENTION

Unification of U. S. and Canadian Systems the Object

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 6.—Postmaster General Work this week met with the Postmaster General of Canada at Ottawa to negotiate a new postal convention with Canada. The conference will last several days. Accompanying the Postmaster General as delegates from the United States to the conference were W. Irving Glover, assistant postmaster general; John H. Edwards, solicitor of the Post Office Department; Edwin Sands, superintendent of foreign mails; Peter Shardt, superintendent of railway mail service; E. K. Burlew, private secretary to the Postmaster General, and Charles Riddiford, inspector-in-charge, Spokane, Washington.

The agenda for the postal convention with Canada provides for the unification of the two postal systems including reciprocal exchange of postal equipment, insurance of parcel post packages between United States and Canada, uniform money order blanks, co-operation between post office inspectors, transit of Canadian mails through the United States and transit of United States mails through Canada, and many other subjects.

WANT ACTION AT ONCE ON KELLY BILL

Postal Committee Pledged to Report Out Legislation, Publishers Hold —Hearing on Dec. 8 Well Attended

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 7.—Representatives of the publishing interests composing the American Publishers' Conference met in Washington December 4, 5 and 6 to ascertain the sentiment in Congress on the Kelly bill, designed to repeal the last two war increases in second-class postal rates. Twenty-five delegates, representing virtually the entire publishing industry of the country, attended the conference, and many remained for the first hearing on the bill, which went before the House Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads December 8.

The publishers take the position that the committee, of which M. Clyde Kelly of Pennsylvania, author of the bill, is a member, is virtually pledged to report out the measure at once. In postponing consideration of the bill last June, the publishers contend, it was practically agreed to give it committee approval at the opening of the present session of Congress if the Joint Postal Commission failed to make its report on the costs of handling mail before December 1. The Post Office Department recently announced the proposed mail-weighing test could not be made before the first of the year, and then only if the necessary appropriation was forthcoming. The Joint Postal Commission met last Tuesday and decided to ask for an appropriation of $963,000 to make the tests.

Investigations of the publishers have convinced the majority that Congress is in favor of affording relief for the industry, which remains the only one paying full war taxes. Some publishers found a feeling of resentment in spots over the attitude of some newspapers in the recent political campaign, and opposition to the proposed reductions is looked for in some quarters.

One of the features of the three-day meeting was the evidence of an organized effort of the weekly newspapers to get relief. John C. Brimblecom, of the Newton (Mass.) Graphic, president of the National Editorial Association, who spoke for 10,000 weeklies, described the present rates as "excessive taxation." His association endorsed the work of the American Publishers' Conference, which was organized to obtain the proposed relief.

Berry Comes to New York

George Berry, president of the International Printing Pressmen and Assistants' Union, arrived in New York Thursday to negotiate a new wage contract for the 10,000 workers employed in the commercial book and job printing shops in New York. The employers are demanding a five per cent decrease while the union is holding out for a 10 per cent increase. The present contract expires December 31, but it will probably be extended until a settlement is reached. Mr. Berry said he also intended giving some attention to the differences now existing between the New York newspaper publishers and their pressmen.

VEILED REPORTER NOW IN TURKEY

Woman Heads Turkish Publicity, Says E. J. Bing, Back from Constantinople—New Sultan Reads N. Y. and London Papers Daily

Chasing news upon a vermin-ridden camel whose ungainly gait is sure to make the inexperienced seasick, and perhaps working with a veiled woman reporter, is liable to be the fate of any American newspaper correspondent assigned to cover events in the Near East, according to Edward J. Bing, Central European correspondent of the United Press Associations, who recently arrived in New York after covering the Mudania armistice conference. Camel riding will surely be the fate of any newspaper man who ventures into Syria and Mesopotamia, and veiled reporters he may quite possibly meet wherever the Turk is in evidence, for Mr. Bing says that they are becoming not uncommon.

Turkish women in the general change which is coming about have already gained a considerable foothold in newspaper work. In fact, Halide Edibe Hanoum, the most prominent Turkish newspaper woman, was in charge of the Turkish publicity during the Mudania conference. She did not attend these sessions, but maintained headquarters at Brusa, a short distance away, and Mebahat Hanoum, also a woman, was the official stenographer of the Turkish delegation at the conference and attended all its sessions.

This rather rapid transfer from the most secluded of spots, the harem, to recognized position in the Turkish newspaper world, where all eyes may at least gaze upon their writing, is not restricted to very few isolated cases, but is now fairly common in Turkey. Women are writing editorials, features and novels published serially in the newspapers and, according to Dr. Bing, while they are not often assigned to the usual run of news gathering, they do their work at the newspaper offices, and while there they throw their veils aside, and proceed much like newspaper women the world over.

Halide Edibe Hanoum (Hanoum is the Turkish equivalent of Mrs.) is but 30 years old and, like other Turkish newspaper women, speaks perfect English and French, and has an intimate knowledge of modern European writings.

On the other hand, the deadly censor is not liable to trouble the American correspondent assigned to this part of the Near East, unless the Turkish officials change their methods. At the Mudania conference they placed no restraint on the copy sent out by foreign correspondents.

After each session Ismet Pasha, or Assim Pasha, met the correspondents, made a statement of what had transpired, answered questions and then, while the portable typewriters were clicking, Turkish officials smoked cigarettes and chatted, but did not try to inspect the dispatches. All the correspondents then had to do was to get them across the Sea of Marmora to Constantinople for cable filing.

Besides Mr. Bing there were two other American correspondents, John Clayton, of the Chicago Tribune; Mrs. Clare Sheridan, the New York World, and James Bradstreet, of the New York Times. The British correspondents made their headquarters on board the English warships anchored in the Sea of Marmora, coming to the conference with Lt.-Gen. Sir Charles Harington and the other officials daily. The conference, which lasted from October 5 to October 11, was covered by French, Italian, Turkish and Egyptian correspondents. A number of newspaper correspondents did their work entirely from Constantinople. Newspaper correspondents from Central European and neutral countries were conspicuous by their absence. This, Mr. Bing explained, was due to the desperate financial straits of newspapers in these countries.

"I had an interview with Abdul Megjid, the new Turkish Sultan, just befo I started for the United States," sa Mr. Bing. "During the two hours were together he told me, among oth things, that he reads two London a two New York newspapers daily, payi special attention to the editorials. S tan Abdul Megjid, you know, is Cali of Islam. He speaks excellent Engli and is a painter of ability, having had number of his canvases exhibited in t Paris salon several years ago.

"Speaking of American newspape the Sultan said that he believed that o papers are ready to hear both sides conditions in the Near East, and th American correspondents are not ha pered by any feeling of national poli in these matters. He further express a strong desire for closer relations wi the United States, saying that he f sure that they would only be of a co mercial nature and not accompanied any territorial desires. Incidentally, d ing the interview, the usual coffee w served in cups of solid gold. No, I d not slip my cup into my pocket—I wa ed to come away in peace."

U. S. PRESS IS PICTURED FOR FRENCH THROUGH GLASSES THAT SQUINT

Americans Are Great Buyers, But Not Readers of Newspapers, Say M. Bacourt and Prof. Cunliffe, Adding That Workers Read With Eyes Only, Their Minds Being Absent

By G. LANGELAAN
Paris Editor, Editor & Publisher

PARIS, Nov. 19.—The November number of France-Etats Unis, a monthly publication issued by the Comité France-Amérique, contains an article on the New York press, "the joint composition of Prof. J. W. Cunliffe, Director of the School of Journalism at Columbia University, and M. Pierre de Bacourt, Correspondent of the Journal des Débats in the United States."

One cannot help feeling, on reading this article intended to inform French readers on the press of New York, that M. Pierre de Bacourt sub-edited what Prof. Cunliffe wrote, for the whole article bears evidence of the Frenchman's view, not the American's.

Statistics are given of the number of newspapers published in New York, the number of pages they generally contain and the amount of reading matter and advertisements they carry. One issue of the New York Times is taken as a model and analyzed page by page for the benefit of the French reader. The results of this analysis are summarized by the authors as follows:

"(1) American newspapers are essentially local; their attention is directed above all to the town and the district in which they are printed and sold.

"(2) News and information from abroad, although generally sufficient, take second place after local news.

"(3) Literary articles or those tending to influence opinion occupy a space which is insignificant compared with the rest.

"(4) The enormous quantity of advertisements necessitates an enormous newspaper and more than amply covers the cost incurred.

"But we must not forget," the article continues, "that the American, as compared with the French reader, considers the advertisements as news, as interesting paragraphs of current events, and he reads them often."

And then the authors of the article pay a compliment to the advertisement writer which they deny to the humble recorder of news, for they say, "All the big stores advertise on a large scale and make every effort to render their advertisements attractive and interesting by a certain artistic and literary turn which is often lacking in the reading matter."

We are also told that "What strikes one first of all, in the treatment of news properly speaking, are the headings and sub-headings in enormous characters which give in a few words, and with intentional exaggeration, a summary of what is to follow."

The "lead" is explained to the French reader, who is informed that, "except for an event of capital importance, it is very rare that readers read to the end of the article * * * Americans are great buyers, but not great readers, of newspapers."

The New York press generally is summarized:

"The Times, respectable, an enemy of wild stories and exaggerations, is eminently the organ of the middle class, which in the United States goes from the humble typist to the millionaire banker. Probably they do not read the same columns, but both find in it what they seek. The Evening World or the Journal offers lighter reading to the worker, the clerk or the shopgirl who comes home tired in the evening. Does one require something substantial? The New York Evening Post, more literary in style, more carefully written, supplies the want. Appealing to the best educated part of the population it has a limited circulation. The same is true in the case of the Tribune and the Evening Sun, which, in the morning and evening respectively, are the favorites of the New Yorker."

Comic sections, with their pictures, come in for harsh criticism. "The stories in pictures enjoy a great success. The series of the adventures of the newly rich, of the husband tormented by an irascible wife, and the mischievous infant, etc., continue interminably year after year, and one does not know which to admire most, the prolific imagination of the artist or the patience of the readers, who seem never to grow tired of having served up to them to infinity the same platitudes. The drawings are generally good, but the wit is often worn threadbare."

The writers of this review of the New York press also mention that, "Enquiries on some insignificant subject such as 'Why do not young people get married?', or 'Why are not women better housewives?' are invariably a success.* * * Special pages for the women folk, for the children, paragraphs of legal advice, medical notes, household recipes, etc., are to be found in all the popular evening papers, and we are told, "enjoy a vogue as persistent as undeserved." "Human interest stories, or sob stuff"—the critics use the American terms—never lack readers, without, however, attaining the popularity of the caricatures. This is understandable; the tired worker reads only with his eye, his mind is absent resting."

One cannot help thinking that when the Frenchman got to this point he should have handed the pen over to the American joint-author of these criticisms, and given Prof. Cunliffe a chance to explain to the French reader some of the advantages of the "lead," for instance, in helping the reader of the American newspaper to get the point of the story at once and learn all the news in a few lines, free to return to the item again for fuller details.

It is sincerely to be hoped that Prof. Cunliffe will take an early opportunity to tell the French reader something of the keenness of the American newspaper reporter and his untiring efforts to get the story, the whole story, and get it quickly, and that he will at the same time make it clear that the American newspaper reader is of a higher intellectual type than this first article would lead one to suppose. Criticism of this sort should be constructive, not merely destructive, and we feel sure that both M. Pierre de Bacourt and Prof. Cunliffe will admit that American journalism has certain elements which place it second to none.

CODE IN SOUTH DAKOTA

Six Short Rules Drafted by State Press Association

A committee appointed by the South Dakota Press Association for that purpose drew up a code of ethics and a digest thereof was made by Paul W. Kieser, editor of the South Dakota Rural Press. There are six rules, viz.:

1. To aim to be of service always in our relations to the public.
2. To adhere strictly to the truth in news, editorial and advertising columns.
3. To keep our readers fully informed on all matters of vital interest.
4. To reserve the right of decision as to what shall be published and what omitted, that our papers may be clean and the rights and reputations of individuals respected.
5. To ban advertising which is indecent or intended to defraud.
6. To demand just recompense, fair treatment and respect from those whom we serve.

Detroit Is Booming

DETROIT has done so many big things—grown so tremendously in population and wealth during the past decade—that some of its remarkable post war accomplishments have come to be taken as matters of course. But consider and compare the following significant figures with the past year's readjustment record of any other city.

(1) Since April, 1922, Detroit Retail Merchants show an average monthly sales increase of 20% over 1921.

(2) Detroit Employers' Association shows an increase in employment of 60,000 workers over 1921 for its member concerns which employ about two-thirds of Detroit's industrial workers.

(3) Detroit Bank Clearings for October, 1922, exceed those of October, 1921, by nearly $100,000,000.

(4) Building for the first ten months of 1922 exceeds that of 1921 by more than $29,000,000.

Can you name any other large city where the percentages of increase equal Detroit's? Detroit is more prosperous today than ever before in its history. It offers unusual opportunities to every manufacturer who will tap this rising tide of prosperity NOW—at the beginning of Detroit's 1923 BOOM.

"Always In the Lead"

THE TRUTH ABOUT GERMANY

Ten Live News Features By Frank G. Carpenter

The most appalling human interest story since the world war.

A nation of sixty millions working day and night for twenty cents per eight hours to compete with our industries.

Big factories humming with business and thousands of women hard on the job.

Millions whose incomes have been wiped out or divided by two hundred thousand per cent.

Beggars who have become millionaires and millionaires who are picking up the crusts from the streets.

Dinners for students and intellectuals at five-eighths of a cent a meal.

Baronesses who are sewing to eke out a living at one thousand stitches a cent.

How the government has pauperized the landlords. Real estate in the big cities being bought up by foreigners.

Twelve-room apartments renting at six cents a month and good business stores at two cents a week.

Farmers who are eating all they are raising to beat the fall of the mark and feeding their milk to the pigs while the city babies are starving.

These are some of the high lights and low lights of the great German nation whose every act affects our own pocketbooks and the fate of the world.

The actual conditions are being investigated by Frank G. Carpenter who, with his secretary and photographer, backed by introductions from our government at Washington, is now traveling in Germany and interviewing all classes.

His letters will begin publication on Sunday, February 18, and will run regularly thereafter for ten or more consecutive Sundays. Every line will be a surprise to the American people, and moreover it will be the cold, hard-boiled, actual truth.

We shall place this stuff in your territory. If you want it, telegraph or write immediately to:

LONDON PUBLICITY CLUB SURVEYS BRITISH SOAP MARKET

Newspapers Supply No Merchandising Service Like That of U. S. Dailies—Strike Proves Newspaper Values—Newspaper Exhibition at Prague

By HERBERT C. RIDOUT

(London, Editor, EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

LONDON, Nov. 25.

IN Great Britain we have no available merchandising service in any way resembling that in vogue with American publishers. Should statistics be required concerning the marketing or potentialities of any product by an advertiser, he cannot, as in the U. S. A. secure them from territorial publishers, or, indeed, in any other way than by compiling them himself or through his advertising agents.

The departure of the Publicity Club of London, therefore, in proposing to examine the markets and selling methods of various products has been a matter of considerable interest and the first results of their investigations in this direction constitute useful data. To secure the results a Bureau of Advertising Facts was established by the club executive, and as the first objective the market and concomitant conditions of laundry soaps were taken.

The retail distribution and salesmanship methods were not brought into the purview. It was the habits of the consumer, his criticism of package, etc., and the relationship of advertising (particularly in connection with prize competitions and prize coupons) that were under consideration.

To obtain information on these subjects questionnaires were prepared for members of the general public asking a series of eighteen questions relating to the following points:

What laundry work was done at home.

Whether hot or cold water (or both) were used.

Whether flake soaps, powder or bars were used.

What brand preferred; what brand actually used.

What other brands tried.

Why certain soaps were used and why others tried had been discarded.

What first attracted user to the soap adopted.

How much bought at one time.

Alterations in size of packet, or improvements to packet.

Whether directions for use are read, and are of value.

Whether users collect coupons or otherwise enter soap prize competitions.

Without giving the actual tabulated results, which form, by the way, valuable data for any advertiser of laundry soap (and are available to such houses) it may be said that 215 complete replies were received to the questionnaires, and from these many interesting facts emerge.

For example, 64 per cent do all washing at home, and only ½ per cent everything except starched articles. Eighty-three per cent use hot water and 17 per cent use both hot and cold, none using cold only. Seeing that several advertisers boost the cold water process, the last named fact is illuminatingly reflective upon the advertising argument—or the soap.

Bar soaps are the most popular, these accounting for 69 per cent of everything, though in the total there prove to be 176 bar users, 107 flake users and 66 powder users.

In the list of popular brands of soaps, it is interesting to notice that the Lever Brothers' brands stand at the top, with Sunlight Soap as 63 per cent of the users of bar soap, Lux as 86 per cent in flakes, Hudson's as 62 per cent in powder form.

In considering the reasons why certain soaps were used and why those tried were discarded, it would appear that but little impression is left upon users as to the special advantages of any one soap, for but 20 per cent of those questioned replied. Habit, advertising, and satisfaction in use seem to be the reasons for continuing to use any brand.

The question as to what attracted the consumer to the soap being used was productive of the following table of percentages:

Advertisements	69
Reputation	15
Sampling	11
Competition	3
Guarantee	1
Total	99
Friends' recommendation	55
Retailers' recommendation	2
Mothers' recommendation	17
Total	74

A few others were attracted by price, smell and style of package.

The number of consumers asking for soap by name and those taking a brand recommended by their dealer are 179 and 15 respectively. Various suggestions for package improvements were made and criticisms offered. Directions for use were read by 133 and ignored by 36; 112 estimate those directions as being of value and 24 declare to the contrary.

So many soaps have been the subject of prize competitions that it is interesting to find 154 of the number do not collect coupons or engage in competitions, only 17 stating that they have no objection to entering them, while 5 say that if the soaps in use offered prizes they would be interested but would not give up the brand for any other to secure prizes.

The information secured is eminently of practical use to soap houses, particularly as the Bureau offers free access to the whole of the accumulated data. It is to be hoped that the Publicity Club will pursue these important investigations in other channels with similar success, for there is every reason to believe that advertisers will appreciate this service just as readily as the merchandising data available to American advertisers is valued in the U. S. A.

ONE of the problems confronting all stores is that of the concentration of all shopping—except, perhaps, in necessity lines—upon the afternoon and evening. Over the Christmas season, with the Yuletide attractions added to the department stores, this invariably results in congestion and our London stores, embracing such houses as Dickins & Jones, Galeries Lafayette, Gamages, Harrods, Daniel Neal, Swan & Edgar, Selfridge's and T. W. Thompson & Co., have combined in an effort to relieve this pressure by encouraging the morning shopper. Between now and Christmas they have arranged for special shows and entertainments which will only be shown in the mornings before twelve. The underground railways and omnibuses are making special arrangements for this "Shop Before Twelve" traffic. Newspaper publicity will be directed at making the experiment effective.

SCALE charges for advertisements in British newspapers continue at a high figure and though from time to time bodies of leading advertisers press for reductions of rates there seems little likelihood of any change. The latest body of space-users to prefer this request was the Auctioneers and Estate Agents' Institute. In communicating the fact of their inability to recommend any action of this kind to their members, the Newspaper Society committee stated that the facts as to the continued high costs of newspaper production furnished to the Auctioneers Institute would probably suffice to satisfy them as to the bona fides of newspaper proprietors. Indeed, if any reduction of this kind comes, it will most probably be found to emanate from some publisher not represented in the Society.

BRITISH publishers are taking some interest in a new project announced by the state of Czecho-Slovakia. This is the First International Newspaper Exhibition to be opened in Prague on December 12 under the auspices of the Czech Journalists' Association. I understand that most leading British newspapers will be represented by copies of their publications, the address of the Directors of the Exhibition being, Messrs. A. L. Pavlik, Prague II; Vodickova 41; Czecho-Slovakia.

DURING the recent printers' strike, two newspapers published in one town combined forces and produced a single newspaper in their joint interests. In this strike edition were inserted all the advertisements for which each of these publishers held instructions; that is to say, if Mr. Jones was an advertiser in both the Journal and the Mercury (the titles are fictitious) his advertisement was inserted in the strike edition. And he was charged by each publisher separately for insertions in that edition. Subsequently, certain advertisers took exception to this on the ground that they had only had the value of one insertion in one paper. The point was brought to the notice of the Honorary Solicitor to the Newspaper Society, and, after consideration, he gave his opinion as follows:

"Inasmuch as this Joint Strike Edition of the 'A. News' and the 'B. Journal' has as wide a circulation as the individual newspapers the 'A. News' and 'B. Journal' enjoy, and consequently the advertisers who have sent the advertisement for publication in the two newspapers got what they asked for, I am of the opinion that they have no ground for complaint, and no reason for refusing to pay on the grounds mentioned by them."

American publishers will probably find this unofficial ruling worth while noting.

THE place of the newspaper in business-getting for retailers was specially realized when the printers' strike a few months back robbed many provincial traders of their means of advertising to the public. A. W. Clarke, principal of a Blackburn (Lancs) dry goods store, recently confirmed this in speaking to a leading publisher here. He said:

"The suspension of the newspaper was the greatest blow suffered by business people in my experience.

"People get so accustomed to trader notices in the press that it becomes a inveterate habit.

"This strike has completely vindicated the newspaper as an advertising medium. Traders are likely to use it more than in the past. Its value has now been established."

USES BIG CLASSIFIED ADVERTISEMENTS BUT THEY SELL CARS

Chicago Cadillac Dealer Has a Daily Ad of 80 to 120 Lines, with Full Description of Each Car and His Agency Enjoys Reputation for Rapid Turnover of Used Cars

Cadillac Coupe "19" Bargain
Jones & Co., 121 Main St.

ABOVE is a typical Want-ad offering a Cadillac automobile for sale. A search of the classified advertising columns of any newspaper will prove that a large percentage of the cars are described in one line.

Suppose you are in the market for a car. Does the line above create in your mind any desire for this particular car? Certainly not.

How to sell used cars more quickly is the great problem of the automobile broker. To solve the problem he is willing to spend good money. He is more than willing—he does spend money. Compared to other lines of business the automobile broker probably spends a high percentage of his gross sales for classified advertising. And yet he usually spends it less wisely.

In Chicago the used car department of the Cadillac is considered one of the most successful. It is a leader in the field. It has a good reputation among the other brokers as well as with the general public. It has an unusually rapid turn over of used cars.

Beyond doubt one of the reasons for this is the type of classified advertising copy it writes. Every day it runs a want-ad from 80 to 120 lines in which it lists 5 to 8 cars, using about a dozen lines of space to describe each car. Note the following samples:

CADILLAC'S SPECIALS

CADILLAC 8, TYPE 61, 5 PASSENGER Coupe. This car is finished in Cadilac blue and upholstered in blue silk velour to match. It has been revarnished and the generally fine appearance of the top and fenders makes it very hard to distinguish from a new car. It has been used by the original owner only a little more than 3,000 miles and has been turned in for a car of larger capacity. Equipped with 5 excellent cord tires, spare, tire cover, bumper, rear traffic signal, spring covers, and shock absorbers. The purchaser of this car will be given a new car warranty. It is the current model car and as such represents a saving at our price of $3,400.

CADILLAC 8, TYPE 61, 7 PASSENGER Touring. This is one of our latest series 7 passenger touring cars and is in such condition that it cannot be distinguished from new. It was turned in by the original owner, who purchased a 61 enclosed model. The car is painted Cadillac blue and is first class in every particular. It is equipped with new cord tires, spare, tire cover, spring bumper, and other extras. It has had comparatively low mileage and will carry the same warranty as a new car. Here is a splendid opportunity to buy a Cadillac of the current model at a considerable saving. Special at $2,600.

CADILLAC 8, TYPE 61, VICTORIA Coupe. The Victoria is one of the most popular models Cadillac has ever built. It seats 4 persons comfortably and for city and suburban use is unexcelled. This particular current series car has been refinished and has every appearance of a new automobile. We have given it a thorough mechanical overhauling and the purchaser will receive the same warranty as that given a new car. It has been repainted a beautiful Berkshire Green. Equipped with seat covers, spare tire, tire cover, spotlight and biflex bumper. An attractive bargain at $3,300.

CADILLAC 8, TYPE 59, LIMOUSINE This is a beautiful maroon car and has had the most particular care in the hands of the original owner. Paint, upholstery and interior appointments will bear the closest inspection. Mechanically the car has been overhauled in our shops and will carry the new car warranty. It is equipped with new cord tires, spare, tire cover, front and rear bumper, automatic squeegee. For the greater comfort of the occupants, the interior is furnished with a heater and a foot hassock. An unusual bargain at $2,750.

CADILLAC 8, TYPE 57, BROUGHAM. The unusual low price placed on this 5 passenger enclosed model is in no way indicative of the careful attention it has had in the hands of the previous owner. It is painted Cadillac blue and upholstered in a very attractive shade of blue velour. Motor is in very good condition, and the car will bear the closest mechanical inspection. Tires are almost new and equipment includes sun visor, step plates, spare tire, and front bumper. Specially priced at $1,500.

STEARNS KNIGHT 1921, 4 PASSENGER Coupe. This car has come to us in very fine mechanical condition. Upholstery and interior fittings show almost no signs of use, indicative of the very unusual care and attention the car has had in the hands of the previous owner. The paint and exterior appearance of the car will make an immediate appeal. It is equipped with excellent cord tires, spare, tire cover, front and rear bumper, spotlight, motometer. There is a carrying space for luggage beneath the rear deck. Special at $1,650.

CADILLAC MOTOR CAR CO.,
CHICAGO BRANCH,
2301 Michigan Ave. Calumet 4841.

Take the first of the Cadillacs described in this typical advertisement. First the description tells you that it will accomodate five passengers. Then it paints a word picture which enables you to visualize in your mind's eye a blue coupe newly finished and upholstered in harmonious silk velour. Having given you a view of the car, the copy next describes in detail the equipment and accessories. Then it states in a way that inspires confidence that the car has been driven only a few miles by the original owner and backs this statement by offering a warranty. Finally the price is told, instead of merely saying it is a bargain.

If you wanted a Cadillac coupe would you answer the one line so-called advertisement at the top of this article or go to the Cadillac Company's show room and ask for the one they described? Of course, you would answer the advertisement giving the more complete description. You would do this because by reading the advertisement you can tell that it is a car that meets your requirements. Yet, as a matter of fact, the other car might be the best bargain.

The Chicago Cadillac Company has been using this kind of copy for several years with the result that in addition to being profitable to them, it is having an influence on the copy of other brokers. More and more of them are adapting the same style of advertising.

Newspapers can well afford to spend time and money to educate their advertisers to write more descriptive copy. It not only means more lineage, but more important—better results for the advertiser which creates satisfied customers.

Dalziel Out of Newspaper Field

Lord Dalziel has retired from English journalism and newspaper management after 30 years active work in Fleet street, according to recent cables from London, which state that he resigned a few days ago from the chairmanship and managing directorship of the London Daily Chronicle, Lloyds News and Reynolds Newspaper. The last mentioned paper has been acquired by a syndicate in which the principal members of the staff are interested. Lord Dalziel has disposed of his trade journal interests to a publishing house and his provincial newspaper holdings have been taken over by a separate corporation, in which a leading financier is understood to be interested. He recently sold his holdings in the Pall Mall Gazette to Sir John Leigh.

Mrs. Harrison Rearrested

Mrs. Marguerite E. Harrison, American newspaper correspondent, has again been placed under arrest by Russian Soviet officials, according to a dispatch from Washington. Word has been received there from Chita, capital of the Far Eastern Republic, of her arrest, but no details of the charges against her are known. No appeal has been made as yet to the State Department for intercession in her behalf.

REFUSE TO BAN CO-OPERATION

Chattanooga Ad Club Has Lively Discussion on Newspaper Service

A discussion dealing with free service rendered by newspapers to the advertisers took place at a recent meeting of the Chattanooga (Tenn.) Advertising Club, as a result of an address opposing this practice delivered by H. C. Adler at the convention of the southeastern division of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World. A resolution disapproving such service was introduced at the club several meetings past, and was voted down at the last meeting.

George F. Milton, publisher of the Chattanooga News said: "There have been different policies pursued by different newspapers. Ninety-five per cent of the newspapers co-operate with the national and local advertisers. This is an effective method of securing business and has, I find, always increased the business of the paper each year.

"This resolution suggests that there is discrimination in favor of the national advertisers. The national advertiser pays a somewhat higher rate. When he asks for a list of dealers or other information we are pleased to furnish it; also information on business conditions and the distribution of advertising matter. Also, I might add that the paper I represent has matrix and cut services that are for the free use of advertisers, writers and others. This department sists in preparing the copy for local vertisers. Their proofs are read copies furnished the advertiser.

"The national advertiser's copy usu comes in plate form. The national vertisers are not given any prefere and there should be no feeling of discri nation. We do not wish to be arbitra We want to please the advertisers. this age of service we all study how serve the community as well as the vertisers, foreign and local."

Mr. Milton explained further that was sometimes difficult for the editor department to draw the line in what strictly news matter.

The Ludlow
For Rapid, All-Slug Make-Up

ALL-SLUG forms have many advantages. The typefaces are all new for every job and there is no distribution to follow. By re-casting each line, multiple forms may be had without electrotypes, and used forms may be held for weeks or months for reprinting.

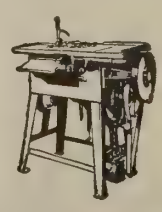
Quick to Make Up — Quick to Make Ready

Bigger units to work with are faster and less subject to error. Slugs do not pi and are easy to justify. They handle like cuts.

All new typefaces make clean, bright forms that are a pleasure to work with. No second hand materials enter into the make-up.

The low quads of Ludlow forms are a striking advantage. They are 12 points lower than printing surface, and cannot smudge.

Quick make-ready on the press comes from all new faces, no low or broken letters and general accuracy in height to paper.



No pull-outs of letters can occur with an all-slug form—such as the figure 1 from a price of $127 or even $12, thus causing embarrassment to advertiser and printer.

Standing forms may be kept a year or more without impoverishing the cases and they will not be found in a pied and picked condition when needed.

Changes for reprints are easily made without any patching of plates. New slugs may be cast and old ones thrown out.

Distribution of used forms is abolished for good. New type on slugs is quicker and cheaper than distribution of old worn types.

"The time and money saving features are many. The rapidity with which forms are locked up and broken up; make-ready time in the press room cut fully one-third; a much cleaner sheet when printed; all work-ups in forms done away with—these are some of the practical results we have secured through the use of the Ludlow System."—The Industrial Press, New York.

Again—First in Gains!

WITH AN EXCESS gain of 229,000 lines over its nearest competitor among the fourteen morning, evening and Sunday newspapers of New York, THE WORLD closes November, its eleventh consecutive month of advertising gains, with a total increase of 2,513,770 lines over the corresponding period last year of which increase more than 1,100,000 lines is in Display Advertising.

Taking first place in May last, for seven months THE WORLD'S leadership in advertising gains in the New York field has never been seriously challenged. Its grand total of 16,389,390 lines carried represents an increase of 13% over the first eleven months of 1921.

A six months' comparison with the other morning and Sunday papers of the city indicates not only the decisive lead of THE WORLD but the trend of advertising in the New York field as well.

TOTAL PAID CIRCULATION LARGEST IN TOKYO

The Hochi Shimbun was established in 1872 by the late Marquis Okuma, and continuously since that early date has lent all its influence to the support of its great founder's lofty ideals.

In the foreign news field the Hochi has built up a service which is unexcelled, and which has earned for it many readers who are intensely interested in persons and events abroad. This interest has been found to exert considerable influence on their taste in the purchase of imported commodities and undoubtedly has increased their consumption of products from abroad.

MORE PRESSES FOR HEARST

Hoe Company Reports Record Business in Last Six Months

Orders have been placed by the Hearst publications with R. Hoe & Co. for six more double sextuple presses, of heavy-unit design and equipped with the Hoe ink pump distribution system. In addition to these machines, the Hoe Company has now almost completed for the Hearst papers four double sextuples and three 20-cylinder universal unit multi-color presses, and recently received an order for 28 color cylinders to be added to the seven Hoe 20-cylinder multi-color presses now in use or on order for these publications. The addition of these 28 cylinders to the seven presses will make the latter 24-cylinder machines, which with the similar 24-cylinder multi-color press being built for the Philadelphia Inquirer, will be the largest printing presses known.

Newspaper orders placed with the Hoe company during the past six months constitute what that company regards as a record for all time. New plants have been ordered by the Kansas City Journal-Post (ten 16-page units); Philadelphia Inquirer (twenty-four 16-page u and one 24-cylinder multi-color pres and the Minneapolis Tribune (twelve page units). The following orders h also been received:

Circulation Is Power

A few words about the Evening Journal, as compared with its competitors.

Each of those competitors will CONFIRM every statement as to circulation made here. The figures here are given under oath to the National Government on the first of last October, in accordance with law.

Can you imagine how much, and how OFTEN, our genial competitors would talk about themselves if they were able to present such facts as follow in the way of overwhelming CIRCULATION SUPREMACY?

First, here are the circulation figures of New York's evening newspapers, ALL of them, as given to the Government by the newspapers themselves:

The Evening Journal has by far the LARGEST DAILY CIRCULATION AMONG ALL NEWSPAPERS IN THIS COUNTRY.

How does the Evening Journal circulation compare with its competitors—if you can call it "competition"?

The facts are important to business men. Publicity is their problem, and there is no publicity test—EXCEPT CIRCULATION.

Compare the Evening Journal circulation with other evening newspapers in another way.

A merchant advertises in The Evening Journal, knowing that his advertising is not DUPLICATE ADVERTISING.

In ONE newspaper, there is no duplication. You don't buy two copies of the SAME newspaper.

If the merchant places that advertisement in—for instance—The Evening World, The Evening Sun and The Globe combined, he knows that he is duplicating circulation, paying twice or three times to reach the same reader.

And, NOTE—The Evening Journal has as much circulation as The Evening WORLD, SUN and GLOBE COMBINED, and 11,567 MORE.

Such supremacy as that possessed by the Evening Journal is unknown in other fields of competition. The greatest merchant does not do TWICE the business of his nearest competitor.

The fastest horse cannot run TWICE as fast as the next horse in the race.

THE EVENING JOURNAL IS ONE HUNDRED PER CENT AHEAD OF ITS NEAREST COMPETITOR, and with 92,000 TO SPARE!

The Evening World comes next to the Evening Journal in circulation. To equal the circulation of the Evening Journal you must MULTIPLY THE EVENING WORLD'S CIRCULATION BY TWO, ADD 92,000. The World will not deny this.

This is not said with any unfriendly feeling toward our competitors, big or little. Business men whose growth and success depend so largely on judicious advertising are entitled to the facts.

The Evening Journal has prospered. But this newspaper's prosperity is as nothing compared to the prosperity that it has made possible for intelligent business men.

Many among them have testified that the Evening Journal—next to their own commercial wisdom—has been the chief force in their growth.

Nathan Straus, one of the three greatest merchants this country has produced, said to the editor of this newspaper some years ago, before he retired from business in New York City:

> "Mr. Brisbane, I suppose many would call me unwise for letting you know it, but the fact is that I could run my business successfully, and keep constantly growing, if I used NO OTHER NEWSPAPER IN NEW YORK EXCEPT THE EVENING JOURNAL. Of course that could not be said of any other newspaper, or any two or three other newspapers."

That tells a story that has a meaning for business men. Mr. Hooper, who owned and distributed the Encyclopedia Britannica, wrote to the editor of the Evening Journal that he was absolutely amazed at the power of this newspaper in selling a book costing more than $100 for a single edition. The response from the Evening Journal was amazingly greater than from any two other newspapers in New York, or anywhere in the United States, and specifically MORE THAN ONE HUNDRED PER CENT GREATER THAN THE NEW YORK TIMES.

When the letter was written, we did not publish it—having a sympathetic heart. But now Mr. Ochs, the wonderfully able man who owns the Times, has so much money that his only difficulty is finding enough safe deposit boxes, and he won't mind.

All that the able merchant demands is "Take my message where the people will SEE it. I will do the rest."

We take your message, through the Evening Journal, to 622,749 homes daily.

The Evening Journal leads all daily newspapers in America. It has done so EVERY DAY IN EVERY YEAR FOR ALMOST TWENTY-FIVE YEARS.

IT WILL CONTINUE TO DO SO.

There is no ACCIDENT about a success of that kind. Two wars have been fought, babies have grown to be voting men—AND WOMEN, six presidential terms have passed, and all the while, THE EVENING JOURNAL HAS BEEN AHEAD OF ALL DAILY NEWSPAPERS IN THE UNITED STATES.

That is where it is going to stay and that is important:

First to a great family of readers, whose thought and power find united expression through this newspaper—

Second, to business men, manufacturers and merchants who find in the Evening Journal what every business needs, the GREATEST AMERICAN DISTRIBUTING AGENCY.

REID PRINTED FACTS THAT HE KNEW, WITHOUT AWAITING LEGAL PROOF

Newspaper Cannot Always Delay Publication of News on a Crime Against the Public Until Sound Legal Evidence Is Available, Says Biographer of New York Tribune Editor

By JAMES MELVIN LEE
Director, Department of Journalism, New York University

SEVERAL inquiries, since this department was started, have reached me about the ethics of betraying news sources when the information was given to the paper in confidence. Any reply to such inquiries must be an expression of personal opinion. I strongly believe that unless the sins of the community can be told to the public press with the same sense of security that the sins of the individual are confessed to the parish priest, the American newspapers might just as well write (30) after today's copy and pass out blue envelopes to all employees—including the editors-in-chief. The pivotal point in newspaper ethics is the sacredness of confidences. The assumption, of course, is made that the information when printed is necessary for the public good. Grave peril exists not only for a free press but also for a free country, if any law is construed to mean that a public official may close publicity channels by demanding the sources of items of news. In certain instances, the public good might seem to be best served by making public such sources, but the welfare of the press in general and the welfare of the country as a whole, will best be preserved if rigid adherence to the principles stated in the preceding sentence be made.

JAMES M. LEE

Two of these inquiries have asked whether there exists in the literature relating to journalism any statement of editorial responsibility for a paper to have legal proof in an exposure of public wrongs. My associate, Leon R. Whipple, calls my attention to a situation which the New York Tribune had to face when that paper was edited by the late Whitelaw Reid. On page 315, volume I, of "The Life of Whitelaw Reid" by Royal Cortissoz (Charles Scribner's Sons), will be found the following:

> "It is a foolish waste of time to call upon editors for details of the crimes they denounce to public reprobation. It is their business to print what they know of such matters, and to leave the rest to the proper authorities. We learned that the Pacific Mail Company had spent money like water in Washington. We asserted this, and the committee has proved it. If we knew what Congressmen got the money we would print the names; it would need no subpoena from Washington to make us do that. We do our best, and that is a great deal. We cannot always wait for exact legal evidence before denouncing a dangerous wrong. If we had waited for that, Judge Barnard and his corrupt associates might have been today upon the bench. Over and over we made charges against them of which we were morally sure, but as to which we were not fully prepared with strict legal proof."

BRIEF mention has already been made in EDITOR & PUBLISHER of "The Young Man and Journalism" by Chester S. Lord (The MacMillan Company). For thirty odd years Mr. Lord was managing editor of the New York Sun, of which the motto for many years was, "If you see it in the Sun, it's so." To the young man who wants to know what is likely to happen to him if he goes into the newspaper business, it can safely be said, "If you see it in Lord's book, it's so." In reviewing this volume for the New York Herald, recently I attempted to show how valuable its perusal was to such a youth who wanted to become a newspaper writer.

But what does it contain for the newspaper man? In a note headed "By Way of Explanation," Mr. Lord says, "The book is elementary: not intended or expected to interest or inform newspaper editors of experience." But Mr. Lord would find it impossible to comment about the different phases and features of the newspaper business without letting his philosophy show itself—a philosophy doubtless molded somewhat by the late Charles Anderson Dana, so long editor-in-chief of the Sun. Only the experienced editor can appreciate:

> "We have said that it behooves the editor who has the confidence of his constituents to nurse that confidence—that a circulation based on confidence is not easily lost. Nevertheless, it is fatal to mislead the public. It is dangerous to circulation to go against public sentiment. A knowledge of public sentiment and the ability to anticipate public sentiment are brilliants, indeed, in the editor's jewelbox of sagacity."

The chapter on "The Editorial Page" might well be headed "What Every Editor Ought to Know." Some of these things are illustrated in the following quotation:

> "And obviously the editor cannot know too much of the fundamentals of government, of law, diplomacy, politics and political causes, of finance, taxation, philanthropy, the relations of labor and capital and so on—the list is endless."

Editors of the old school that has no sympathy with some of the modern fashions in newspaper dress, might study to advantage such an assertion as:

> "A little discreet exuberance of expression may be tolerated in newspaper writing. Sensational newspapers do no harm as long as they stick to the truth. You may print your editions in red ink, with job type, with headlines a foot high if you like, without other offenses than to exaggerate the importance of your announcement. Typographical eccentricity merely attracts attention. It serves the same purpose as does the orator's violent gesture or the messenger's breathless announcement. It excites curiosity, arouses interest."

This style is described somewhat in detail in the chapter on "Newspaper Composition," in which Mr. Lord quotes Macaulay's remark, "The best portraits are perhaps those in which there is a slight mixture of caricature, and we are not certain that the best histories are not those in which a little of exaggeration, of fictitious narrative, is judiciously employed."

Space—no editorial fib—forbids more quotations.

Mr. Lord concludes his book with a chapter on "Newspaper History." I might point out several errors in this chapter but that is unnecessary for those who have read in EDITOR & PUBLISHER my chats about "the cradle days of journalism." In those chats will be found a detailed description of what seems to be the first newspaper to be printed in the English language, for the date of which Mr. Lord gives me credit on page 201. In the latter part of the chapter, Mr. Lord is on more sure ground as to facts. Especially valuable is his account of the differences between the newspapers of 1850 or 1860, than those of today.

Those of us who have worked under Boss Lord and have taken either his oral or written orders, will be glad to have this permanent record of the art of newspaper making as he sees it.

ADOLPH S. OCHS broke into New York journalism very quietly. In the issue of the New York Times for August 19, 1896, he printed a modest salutatory of what would be his policies. A little later he circulated a rather remarkable advertisement. This was in the form of a contract entered into by the Guardians of the Homes of Greater New York, parties of the first part; and the New York Times Company, party of the second part. One clause, that relating to supplying a paper to the said parties of the first part for their daily reading, well indicates the nature of the agreement:

> The New York Times, a morning newspaper, said newspaper to be well edited, well printed and of the highest class, and which shall contain all the news that's fit to print, avoiding sensationalism, scandal-mongering and all things that offend against good morals and against good taste; encouraging good citizenship and good government; a newspaper that can, with entire confidence, be admitted into the family circle for the benefit, use and enjoyment of parents and children, of young men and young women; and further, and in addition to said daily newspaper said party of the second part hereby agrees to supply on Saturday of each week a sixteen-page supplement devoted to books and art and on Monday of each week a supplement devoted to the news of financial transactions, and for said supplement there shall be no extra charge.

Part II of "The History of the New York Times," by Elmer Davis, is the story of this contract from the time when Mr. Ochs as publisher signed the agreement, down to the present time. Part I of the volume deals with the earlier history of the Times and is composed chiefly of material that has already appeared in print either in the Special Jubilee Supplement of the Times in 1901 or in Augustus Maverick's book on the New York press.

The introduction to this history has been furnished by Mr. Ochs. In a way, it is a report of his financial stewardship. He reports that the gross income for his period has been in round figures, $100,000,000. Of this amount less than $125,000 a year, on the average, has been withdrawn and distributed as dividends. The rest of the amount has been used to fulfill the terms of the contract to which reference has been made. (At the time Mr. Ochs assumed control, the deficit was $1,000 a day.) Mr. Ochs prints a detailed statement as to the distribution of the stock of his company. Of rumors about the ownership of the Times, we have heard enough and to spare.

Mr. Ochs, in his introduction, acknowledges his debt to the late Charles R. Miller, who was for so many years editor-in-chief; to Carr V. Van Anda, managing editor for almost two decades; and to Louis Wiley, the present business manager who has been associated with Mr. Ochs almost from the time of purchase.

Mr. Davis traces somewhat in detail the editorial policies of the Times. He adds, now and then, appropriate comment as to reactions of these views on the reading public. Possibly the most interesting part of the book for practical newspaper men is where Mr. Davis outlines the development of the Times on its news side. Some of the episodes in its business history, Mr. Davis has so presented that they contain valuable suggestions for other publishers of metropolitan dailies. Possibly for the benefit of critics, Mr. Davis has told about the ethical standards adopted and how they have been applied both by the editorial and by the business office.

In many respects—and these the most essential—Mr. Davis has written the best history of an individual newspaper that has yet appeared in print. He has been a member of the editorial staff of the Times since 1914 when he was graduated from Oxford, where he was a Rhodes scholar from his native state of Indiana. Having his information first hand, he has compiled a history that has many useful lessons for other makers of newspapers. The most important of these lessons Mr. Davis mentions in his concluding paragraph:

> In the opinion of the management of the Times, perhaps the most important lesson is that integrity, common sense, and good judgment are more likely to bring success than wild extravagances, constant experimentation and the frantic following of each new fashion. The fact that a particular policy or a particular feature has been a success on one paper is no guarantee that it will be successful everywhere. In the newspaper business, as in most other businesses, the surest road to success—in the opinion of the management of the Times—is to know what you want to do and know how to do it.

AN interesting essay on the history of the "Negro Press" has just been published by George W. Gord, Jr. It is entitled "Negro Journalism," costs 3 cents, and may be obtained from the Department of Journalism of De Pauw University, Greencastle, Indiana. The pamphlet will open the eyes of editorial writers who have not been following closely the growth and development of periodicals published in the interests of the colored race.

The Multi-Mailer System is making Millions of Subscribers more Responsive to Advertising

Some of the Newspapers, Publishers and Magazines who are building Subscriber Satisfaction with the MULTI-MAILER SYSTEM

Publishers install the Multi-Mailer System not only because it makes the handling of their mail lists easier, quicker and better, but because—

They know that the installation of the Multi-Mailer System also tends to make their mail subscribers more responsive to the advertising they carry.

Deliver your publication to your subscribers promptly, in good condition—and you'll not only win their good will but confidence.

This subscriber confidence, born of a perfect mail delivery service, influences their mental attitude toward your advertisers. Because they trust you, they trust the advertisements you carry and are more responsive to their appeals.

Why not give your subscribers the same confidence-creating mail delivery service now being enjoyed by millions of subscribers? It is profitably possible for all publications with a mail list of over 1,000.

SCRIPPS GROUPS HAVE NEW CHIEF EDITORS

Appoint Cook in Ohio, Edwards on Coast, Parker in South, and Rickey to New Group— Other Staff Shifts

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 3.—Several editorial changes in the Scripps-Howard newspaper organization were announced December 1 by William B. Colver, general editorial manager. E. E. Cook succeeds V. H. Morgan as editor-in-chief of the Ohio group. Paul C. Edwards is appointed editor-in-chief of the California group, vice Eugene Maclean. Mr. Edwards is succeeded as editor-in-chief of the group composed of the Memphis Press, Oklahoma News, Fort Worth Press and Houston Press, with the El Paso Post to be added later, by George B. Parker.

PAUL C. EDWARDS

E. E. COOK

A new group has been formed comprising the Baltimore Post, Washington News, Norfolk Post, Birmingham Post, Knoxville News, and Denver Express, with the Des Moines News to be added to it shortly, and H. N. Rickey has been appointed editor-in-chief of this group. Mr. Parker, who has been editor of the Cleveland Press, is succeeded on that paper by H. B. R. Briggs and the latter's chair as editor of the Denver Express is filled by Sidney B. Whipple. Charles J. Lilley is named editor of the Houston Press, succeeding George V. Sanders.

G. B. PARKER

H. B. R. BRIGG

E. E. Cook, the new Ohio editor-in-chief, is the oldest editor in point of continuous service in the Scripps-Howard newspaper ranks. He joined the staff of the Columbus Citizen March 1, 1899, and became editor of the paper when it was bought by the Scripps-McRae League in 1904. He is promoted from this post to his new duties.

Paul C. Edwards started newspaper work on the San Francisco Daily News, a Scripps paper, after making his way through college as a newspaper correspondent. He was transferred to the Dallas Dispatch, rose to managing editor, then helped to found the Houston Press and was its first editor. In 1919 he became editor-in-chief of the Southern group of Scripps papers and helped to found the Fort Worth Press in 1921. He was editor-in-chief of the Southern group when promoted to take editorial charge of the California group.

Henry B. R. Briggs, the new editor of the Cleveland Press, entered newspaper work in Kalamazoo, Mich. From 1911 to 1913 he was an executive of the Newspaper Enterprise Association, a Scripps-Howard concern, and from 1913 to 1920, he was editor of the St. Paul Daily News. He returned to the N. E. A. in 1920 and after a short service took the editorship of the Denver Express, which he held until his present appointment.

G. B. Parker began his career when the Oklahoma News was founded by the Scripps-McRae concern, worked his way up to the editorship of that paper and was promoted to the editorship of the Cleveland Press early last year. The group of which he becomes editor-in-chief includes the Oklahoma News.

OUR TURKEY SUPPLEMENT

which cut cleanly across virtually every just interpretation of national desire in the Near East. This is the chief function the report may fulfil today. It is admitted that its story is only of what might have been, but was not. Why it was not, and why American purpose in participating in the war and in the peace was betrayed in return for phrases, is the story of the secret treaties which wrote the outline of peace long before President Wilson sailed for Europe.

To those secret treaties, the belated publication of this report makes clear, the present misery in the Levant is immediately chargeable.

Everybody's Secret

(New York Evening Post)

We are apparently at the beginning of an open season for well-known suppressed state papers and widely circulated secret diplomacies. Yesterday the Times began the publication, by courtesy of the EDITOR & PUBLISHER, of the King-Crane report on the Near East prepared in the early part of 1919 for the use of the American representatives at the Peace Conference. Today we have the publication of a seven-and-a-half-year-old report by Dudley Field Malone on the famous question of explosives on the Lusitania.

Both suppressed reports reveal to an astounded public precisely what it has known all along. The essence of the King-Crane report is that the Syrian people in 1919 were in a very great majority for a United Syria, for no mandate unless it were an American mandate, and against Zionism. These facts have been the commonplace of newspaper report and of all kinds of comment and debate for years. The Malone report on the Lusitania states what has been known since shortly after the Lusitania tragedy: that the ship carried neither explosives nor guns nor troops, and that its only war cargo was several thousand cases of small-arm ammunition.

The most celebrated instance of the wide-open secret is, of course, the case of the Allied secret treaties with which Mr. Wilson found himself confronted at the Peace Conference. Whatever may have been the degree of reticence practiced by the Allied diplomats, it is the simple fact that the text of the Treaty of London in the matter of Italy and her claims in the Adriatic was published by the Bolshevist Government soon after it came into power. In this country the Evening Post made the treaties familiar to the public long before the Peace Conference assembled. It may be that in the business of carrying on the war the Administration at Washington had little time or attention for these treaties as they appeared in the news; and it is certainly true that in any case the United States at the Peace Conference was not bound by these treaties. But there is some reason for doubting whether our representatives at Paris were utterly astounded by the revelation of the secret pacts.

Governments and publics are not dissimilar in succumbing to astonishment at the startling disclosure of what they have known all along. The public, in particular, has too often sought an alibi from its responsibilities by saying "If we had only known" when as a matter of fact it has known all the time or could have known if it had taken the slightest trouble.

The King-Crane Report

(New York Call)

Publication by the EDITOR & PUBLISHER of the King-Crane report on conditions in the Near East brings to light a document of importance that has been shrouded in secrecy for a number of years. Henry Churchill King and Charles R. Crane were members of the American Commission on Mandates in Turkey in 1919. Having made a thorough survey of the economic, radical, religious, political and geographical factors bound up with the Turkish settlement, their report has remained a mystery until its recent publication.

One does not have to accept all the findings and recommendations of this report, yet it presented realities that were ignored by the Allied victors. It is in conflict with the "peace" established in the Near East by the peace treaties. It is given publicity at a moment when this "peace" lies in ruins and the diplomats are at Lausanne trying to rebuild their shattered structure.

The report presents a glaring contrast between the "solemn promises" of the diplomatic liars during the war and the settlement they made. It exposes the opposing ambitions of the Allies in Turkey, reveals the evils of the secret treaties, refutes the claims of European powers to Turkish territory, and unmasks the censorship of the Allies and their propaganda by showing that this propaganda has borne little relation to actual conditions. Another lesson to be drawn from this report is the abysmal ignorance of churchmen in this country who have urged a holy war against the Turks. Such a war would have for its purpose more substantial stakes than the rescue of Christian populations, stakes that include oil and other loot in Turkey.

Piece by piece we are getting the truth about the peace treaties. As the truth becomes known every item is a complete vindication of those who refused to accept the issues of the war as stated by the imperialist guardians of each country. Humanity the world over has paid a terrible price for the deceit practiced and expounded in terms of ethical fervor by the professional liars. Their dirty trade will afflict us until humanity abolishes the system that makes it possible.

WITH THE SERVICES AND SYNDICATES

KARL A. BICKEL, general manager of the United Press Associations, returned with Mrs. Bickel from Europe on December 2. While abroad he visited London, Paris and Berlin.

Ed Angly of Palestine, Tex., has just been promoted from the New York staff of the Associated Press to cable editor for the A. P. in the London office.

E. Parker Anderson, formerly correspondent of the several Southern newspapers in Washington, has opened the Washington Intelligence Bureau which will conduct a general query service for newspapers, trade papers and magazines.

FINAL BEECKMAN SU STARTED THIS WEE

Original Case Only One Likely to Before Present Grand Jury— Decision Reserved in Second Action

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Dec. 4.—Judge ham today heard testimony in the of the Beeckman-Reuter series of c arising from the publication in the Pr dence News on October 20 an ar alleging that the former Governor Be man had attempted to bribe Herv Lagace with $1,500. Final argument three of the cases will be made be Judge Gorham Friday morning. dence submitted today for the most retraced testimony offered in prev days in the trial of the cases instit after the News had claimed that a ment of $1,500 had been made.

The first of these cases to have a liminary hearing was Mr. Beeckm complaint charging the Hope Publis Company with criminal libel. The spondent was adjudged probably g and bound over to the Grand Jury, w began its session today.

The second case was one in which Beeckman charged John Hennessy, e of the paper, with criminal libel. sion has been reserved until briefs filed.

It now seems probable that the case is the only one against the N which will go before the Grand Jur its present session.

The false pretense case against Lagace is the one heard today. Rea were set forth why the purported of Lagace's affidavit published in News should be admitted as evid His contentions were rebutted, but affidavit was ruled in. Mr. Henn was ordered a week ago to find the davit, but reported that it could no found.

In the criminal libel case conti against Mr. Hamilton, secretary of paper, Mr. Branch offered as evid some parts of the alleged libellous ticle, also affidavits of the Hope Pub ing Company showing that Hamilto stockholder, director and secret treasurer of the paper.

With the opening of the conspi charge, which was also brought up, attorneys for the complainants soug introduce a certified copy of the an report of the Hope Publishing Com but it was ruled out.

Several copies of the Providence N of later dates than October 20 were troduced as evidence to show, accor to the complainant's attorney, a re tion of the charges against Mr. Be man. Affidavits to show that Me Hennessy, Hamilton and Keenan officers of the Hope Publishing Com were also introduced. The attorneys the publishing company introduced evidence at today's session. The j has reserved his decision in the cas far as the preliminary hearings t were concerned, until later.

THE BIG SCHEME OF SIMPLE OPERATION

THE LINOTYPE ESCAPEMENT MECHANISM

It Insures Clean Proofs

IT would have been easy to devise a comparatively crude mechanism which would have served after a fashion to transmit the motion of the key to the magazine and release the matrix. But while a simple escapement would have been cheaper to build, its parts would soon become worn and it would be inaccurate. An inaccurate escapement means dirty proofs. This is another place where simple construction leads to difficult operation.

In the Linotype Escapement the motion is transferred to six moving parts so that the pawls (A-A) will move parallel to each other, and the load will all come on the supporting shoulders (C-C).

That is why a Linotype even many years old in service runs as fast, operates as accurately, and sets as clean proofs as a new one. Every part is there because the machine is better for it and all parts fit into the Big Scheme of Simple Operation.

CUT OPERATING COSTS BY AMORTIZING PLANT DEPRECIATION CORRECTLY

Obsolescence or Revolutionary Changes Which Render Machinery Useless Cannot Be Covered in This Account, but Ordinary Course of Operation Can Be Protected

By CLIFFORD YEWDALL

IN the November 11th issue of EDITOR & PUBLISHER there was published a letter from Elbert Bede in which he took issue with myself on my statement that a rate of 10 per cent would depreciate property entirely in ten years.

Mr. Bede in his letter pointed out that if at the end of the first year 10 per cent depreciation was taken on the machinery, and the resultant figure deducted from the asset account, that the machine would never be depreciated at all. This is perfectly true. It is not, however, usual in accounting practice to take depreciation on a declining balance. The correct accounting principle is to set up on one side of the balance sheet, cost prices of the asset and to determine for each class of asset comprising the total, the estimated life of the asset.

If it is figured that the asset will last ten years, then depreciation is deducted on the original cost figure at a rate of 10 per cent on such cost, the amount of the depreciation each year being credited to a depreciation reserve fund which appears as a liability on the balance sheet. At the end of the tenth year if the depreciation record has been properly kept, there will have been accumulated in this fund, an amount equal to the original cost of the machine and no further depreciation should be taken, but on the other hand, a journal entry should be made debiting the reserve account and crediting the plant account with the cost price of the machine, hence taking it out of both assets and liabilities as they appear on your books.

If the life of the machine is considered to be 25 years, then depreciation would, of course, be figured on cost at 4 per cent per annum and corresponding figures ascertained for each class of machinery on hand. The quantity of machinery on hand in the average newspaper plant is not too great that a detailed classified account of that machinery cannot be kept. You keep a detailed account of your accounts receivable in a ledger. Why should you not also keep a similar subsidiary account for your plant and machinery, and figure the depreciation on each asset according to the actual facts and known conditions regarding that class of machinery?

For instance, one may purchase a second-hand linotype machine and in the same week also purchase a new machine. It is obvious that the span of life of a new machine will be greater than the span of life of a second-hand machine, hence if you apply an average rate of depreciation to both machines, one of them would not be correctly depreciated. Many plans purchase a second-hand machine to assist in their rush periods. That machine would not depreciate so fast as one that was purchased because of the lack of funds necessary to buy a new machine and so being constantly used.

Depreciation should be scientifically applied to each individual asset. It is impossible to lay down a specific rule that will apply to everybody. Conditions alter quickly. What may be good sound judgment today on depreciation of linotype and presses, may be very bad judgment tomorrow by reason of new improvements, or revolutionary improvements in that type of machinery will make presses and equipment scrap value. That would not, of course, apply to the smaller newspaper in a small town with little or no competition, but it would apply to the large newspaper in a big city with keen competition. Should some press manufacturer for instance, suddenly come up on the market with a press that would produce say 100,000 forty-eight page papers per hour and that press being installed in a large city newspaper office where time was a factor in getting out the newspaper, such an invention would have a serious effect on the competitors of that paper in that town and would probably force them to also purchase some high-speed press to compete, with a resultant large loss on the realization of their present equipment. Depreciation, however, was not intended to take care of such violent fluctuations. Such a loss would be an extraordinary loss not to be encountered in the usual business course.

Depreciation, on the other hand, is that amount that is necessary to be put on one side year by year as your machine is being used, so that at the end of its usefulness, a new machine of equal capacity can be purchased. Many newspaper publishers are trying to take up obsolescence in their depreciation rates. It was never intended that depreciation should cover this branch of your wasting assets. That is a condition brought about by expansion and the loss on such realization should be taken care of out of the additional profits that are made through such expansion.

The Income Tax Laws specifically allow as a charge-off against earnings, a loss of an extraordinary nature which is not compensated for by insurance. It is, of course, probable that the Department would attack your depreciation rate as being too low were such a loss presented to them. On the other hand, evidence could probably be introduced to show that such a loss on the sale of a piece of equipment due to the expansion of your business and the necessity of putting in more modern equipment, was partly accounted for by the cost of removing the old equipment from your building and the erection of the new equipment. It could also probably be shown that the useful life of that equipment after it had been moved out of your building had not been impaired and would still continue to function for many years according to its original capacity, and that the only reason for a change was because it was overloaded.

If, of course, you care each year to put aside in cash the actual amount of sustained depreciation and invest that amount of money in safe securities or Government bonds each year, the interest received from such investment being invested when received, it would be possible to work out an amortization plan of investment which would provide at the end of a given number of years a certain amount of money with which to purchase new machinery of equal capacity to the one that you are disbanding, and if such a basis were worked out in a newspaper plant, it would probably be found that the charge against operations for depreciation each year would be considerably less than 5 per cent and probably only 2½ per cent of the cost price of that equipment.

Selling Pages

Why should the biggest business in your town be content with the use of small space?

Why should not the principles of Christianity be proclaimed in full pages?

They are in some towns.

The Tribune of Kokomo, Ind., recently sold a series of full pages to a group of fifteen local merchants, using copy issued by this department.

For several weeks, in quarter page space, the publisher donated space and used the copy to stimulate greater church attendance. The merchants then said they wanted a part in the campaign and bought the space.

Perhaps you can do the same thing.

Tear out this ad now and send for the proofs. There are 52 pieces of copy—special ones for Christmas, New Year's, Easter, etc., and the price for use is very small. Address Herbert H. Smith, 518 Witherspoon Bldg., Philadelphia, Pa.

The South Now Raising Its Own Eatables

It is no longer a one crop section—producing cotton alone.

The South has dropped the one crop system and is beginning to feed itself and help the rest of the nation.

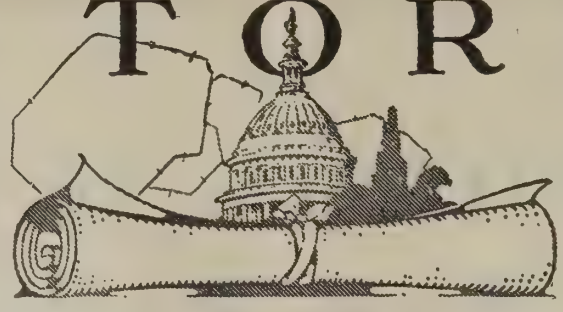
The Southern farmer is now raising over one-third of the country's corn, four-fifths of the rice, one-fifth of the wheat, one-fifth of the hay, one-fourth of the sugar, one-fourth of the apples, nearly half of the peaches, most of the sweet potatoes and early vegetables.

The live stock industry has grown by leaps and bounds until today it has over one-third of all live stock of the country.

The South also has 32.9 per cent of all rural roads and 34.2 per cent of all surfaced roads, it is better developed than the rest of the country in this respect.

The total railroad mileage in the South is 32.9 per cent of the entire country.

The growth of transportation facilities has aided materially in rapid agricultural and industrial advancement.



The South today offers more to the national advertisers than any other part of our land—because it is developing faster, is richer in natural resources and has greater merchandising possibilities.

Right now the opportunities encourage newspaper advertising. Use this list.

EDITORIAL

BETWEEN OURSELVES

IRVING BRANT makes a very serious charge against the newspapers of America in his article on the subject of propaganda and its effect on the news in this issue. EDITOR & PUBLISHER is convinced that the charge is justified.

American journalism is not up on its toes. It is not fighting. The newspapers of the country as a whole are rapidly nearing a plane and place as presenters of the evident instead of going out and digging for news. Whether responsibility for this condition rests with the executives or with the reporters of today is hard to state, but it is time for stock-taking by both. There is no question but that public opinion is being swayed today by propaganda and not news if news value is established on the basis of facts.

Indictment of the American press rests on its lack of initiative—its smug self-satisfied treading of the path called the easiest way. This is not the result of corruption, for the press of the land was never as free and independent and capable of doing big things as it is today.

At various times since 1919 groups of native Americans and interested Americans of foreign birth have clamored at the doors of the United States Department of State and the Foreign Relations Committee of the United States Senate and demanded that the King-Crane Report on the Near East be made public so that final American opinion on the questions at issue might be based upon facts established by American investigators instead of upon the propaganda of selfish interests. Every newspaper man in Washington knew of these demands. Every Washington newspaper man knew it was still news when the Syrians petitioned for its publication as late as last Spring. Knowing this, why was there no digging to uncover such an important document? EDITOR & PUBLISHER found the digging very easy! Certainly, there is no correspondent in Washington who would confess that he never considered the possibility that former President Wilson had a copy of the King-Crane Report.

If we only had one example there would be no case. But that is not true. To cite another example that measures to national importance we can point to the Bursum Pueblo Indian Bill. The merits of the bill are immaterial, but the fact that the editors of America had to wait until an agency working in the interest of the American Indian had put its propaganda in the mails to secure material on which to base editorial opinion offers no avenue for excuse for the men in the Senate press gallery.

The present condition of which EDITOR & PUBLISHER complains is not confined to Washington. It applies to the entire country, but any corrective movement must start in Washington because that is the news center of the nation today and the magnet that draws the stars of journalism from every part of the world.

Washington correspondents place responsibility for the present conditions on their employers. They divide it under the head of poor salaries and restrictions on newspaper initiative that have hung over from the war.

Newspaper editors and managing editors place the responsibility on the men. They say that reporters today do not have the ambition and ability of the men who were making our journalism the most militant in the world before the war. Undoubtedly both are partly right.

There are more battles ahead than we have gone through in the last three years. The future of America as the world's leading nation is going to be at stake. It will be warfare between fact and propaganda with public opinion the fighting ground. Newspapers and newspaper writers are going to direct and decide this war and in their present Compub-shocked condition, resulting from the war, they do not measure up to the job.

Journalism is a fertile field today. There are more than a thousand stories worth telling and every one of them holds interest for the newspaper reader. To uncover some of them will require hard work and expense, but they are worth it. No reporter has yet written the story of stock dividends that have startled the country by their magnitude; war profits are still a national secret used by a partisan group to pin prick a partisan group. The people of the nation—the world—are crying for information upon which to build a solid future. This is journalism's golden opportunity for service.

The American public today is not getting the facts—the only foundation upon which honest public opinion can be built. This applies alike to financial, industrial and labor developments. Serious news that directly affects the well-being of the nation is getting only slight consideration. It requires painstaking digging; we are still in the easy rut dug during the war, so we are receiving propaganda that is carefully prepared by selfish interests, and the froth from everyday life.

It is time for some serious stock-taking in the newspaper offices of the country.

AN AMERICAN'S CREED

COMPILED BY CHARLES W. MILLER

Vicksburg (Miss.) Herald

REGARD not them that have familiar spirits, neither seek after wizards, to be defiled by them; I am the Lord your God. Thou shalt rise up before the hoary head, and honour the face of the oldman, and fear thy God: I am the Lord. And if a stranger sojourn with thee in your land, ye shall not vex him.—(*Lev. xix:*31-33). But if ye will not do so, behold, ye have sinned against the Lord: and be sure your sin will find you out.—(*Num. xxxii:*23). Blessed is the man to whom the Lord will not impute sin.—(*Rom. iv:*8). Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip. For if the word spoken by angels was stedfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward; How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation; which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard Him; God also bearing them witness, both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to His own will?—(*Heb. ii:*1-4).

A GULF TO BE BRIDGED

NOTHING is more needed today in the community life of America than the Christian ideal. For this reason it is amazing that the churches are not making greater use of the newspapers in carrying out their educational mission.

The press is the greatest of all missionary opportunities. Nevertheless it is not being used to the fullest by the churches. The fact that the church has not availed itself of the newspaper as a means to arouse the community conscience to the Christian ideal is to be regretted and should be corrected. In some sections of the country a way has been found that has led to better understanding and wider spread of the highest ideals of mankind through the hearty co-operation of these two agencies for greater good. On the whole, there is still too wide a gulf between them, although the final goal of both—do unto your brother as you would have him do unto you—is the same.

ANOTHER of the old group of editors whose personality was evident in their anonymous writing passed this week when Andrew McLean died, leaving the Brooklyn Citizen better known nationally than to many of his fellow townsmen. His uncompromising demand for the facts and equally intransigeant stand on them when established, are qualities that journalism can never have in too great abundance.

ADVERTISING IN STRIKE EDITIONS

ONE aftermath of the recent British newsp printers' strike will be of general intere American publishers—the ruling by the orary Solicitor of the Newspaper Society—prot of the A. N. P. A.—that advertising published newspaper issued jointly during the strike emer by all the city's newspapers can be charged to th vertisers by each of the interested newspapers v had contracts with them.

It is an argument that has seldom arisen in A can newspaper-making and one with which few lishers are familiar. American newspaper st rarely reach the magnitude of crippling the e press of a city for more than a few hours, and malcy" is usually restored before the newspaper ers have had time to execute emergency measur

The British printers, however, remained o many cities for almost a month and the joint edition was a familiar institution, which is cre with having saved many thousands to local bus men whose prosperity had been founded on and ished by daily newspaper advertising. Business ceeded as usual with the newspapers in the city o dispute. The co-operative plant was manned by torial and business office men who had served as positors. Advertising was solicited in the regular Every reporter who was not at the case or a ma did his regular task of getting the news.

Merchants who had been accustomed to usin the papers under contract received their usual in the joint edition, which was circulated to all r paper readers in the city, and they were charge their space by each publisher with whom they h contract. This charge was paid by some, but dis by others, who claimed that they had received the value of one insertion in one paper.

The ruling of the Honorary Solicitor for the N paper Society that the advertisers received all asked for, in that the circulation of the strike e was equal to that of all the pre-strike newspape sound, and while it is purely unofficial, it is pro enforceable at law. The circulation of the strik tion, it can be safely assumed, was universal i city. There was no duplication, no competition. reader interest, because of the emergency, cert was no less intense than that of the journals places it filled. In fine, it was a kind and degr circulation that can seldom be attained in the work by any individual American or British paper.

Add to these arguments that the publishers not kept local business alive by publishing the strik tion, but that they were fighting the strike its the interest of lower operating costs and lower ch to the advertiser, and it is hard to conceive o other ruling than that given to the Newspaper ciety. It is a useful precedent for the publisher is prepared to defend his ownership rights, not against aggression of labor but also against a tisers who demand that newspaper wage increas fought, but refuse to pay any of the costs of combat.

THE PRESS AGENT'S TOLL

THE Western Union Telegraph Company l of the fact that it has found an adver appropriation unnecessary since 1918. company continues to believe in advertising, hov

FOLKS WORTH KNOWING

RALPH H. BOOTH, president of the Booth Publishing Company, publishers of the Grand Rapids Press, the Ann Arbor Times-News, the Flint Journal, the Bay City Times-Tribune, the Jackson Citizen - Patriot, the Kalamazoo Gazette, the Muskegon Chronicle, and the Saginaw News-Courier, was recently honored with the offer of appointment as United States Senator to succeed Truman H. Newberry, resigned, but declined because he believed he could be of greater service to his country and state through the unlimited opportunities of an independent press than by his personal participation in party politics. In his letter of declination to Gov. Groesbeck, Mr. Booth said:

RALPH H. BOOTH

"The high importance attaching to the appointment of a United States senator at this times makes me deeply appreciative of the consideration given to me in this connection.

"I have given this subject most careful and, I believe, patriotic consideration. Each of us who feels the high responsibility of citizenship should have an important duty to perform and the deep consideration of my friends and associates with myself has resulted in the belief that I should continue to serve through the intimate direction of the eight newspapers published by the company of which I am president. Indeed, I feel a pride in the thought that in this highly important time in the history of our country newspapers which are conscientiously independent have an almost unlimited opportunity for service.

"Another thing which may not be broadly understood, but to which I attach some importance, is the service I am endeavoring to render to the city of Detroit in the capacity of president of the arts commission, for I sincerely believe that only through the development of the finer things in our midst can we reach true greatness and in a large measure it is in these finer things, music, literature and the fine arts that make for a better and more contented type of citizenship.

"May I, therefore, request you to permit me to withdraw my name from your further thought in determining to whom shall go the high honor of representing Michigan in the senate of the United States?"

S. V. Anderson has succeeded Percy Hansen as city editor of the Jamestown (N. D.) Daily Alert. Mr. Hansen has opened a job printing shop.

ILLINOIS

89 PER CENT IN FARM LAND

Illinois has an area of 56,665 square miles, of that area 56,043 square miles are land. Eighty-nine per cent of that land is in farms and over eighty-five per cent is improved farm lands.

The fertility of Illinois soil has caused the state to rank for many years as one of the nation's leaders in the value of agricultural properties and the gross annual receipts of its agricultural products.

According to recent census Illinois stood second and third in value of property and value of crops respectively.

While Illinois has generally been characterized as an agricultural state, it has for many years occupied a leading position industrially because of the importance and variety of its manufactured products.

Such a combination makes this territory worthy of consideration in any advertising campaign.

WEST VIRGINIA

There is enough good business in West Virginia to make a good advertiser rich through its daily newspapers.

The State that produces and sells about $135,000,000 in coal, $50,000,000 in natural gas and $22,000,000 in petroleum, that makes chemicals, glass, pottery, etc., and has power and transportation facilities to equal any undertaking is greatly above the average buyer and if you do not know them, then you should.

By the very minimum investment in daily newspaper advertising you can cover this territory.

These newspapers promise cooperation with your sales promotion department.

ANDREW McLEAN DIES IN HIS 74th YEAR

Founder and Editor of Brooklyn Citizen Came from Scotland as a Boy— Was Also a Playwright and a Poet

Andrew McLean, a founder and editor-in-chief of the Brooklyn Citizen, died at his home in Brooklyn of pneumonia on December 4. He was in his 74th year. Mr. McLean was taken ill November 29. Physicians were called at once and for a while, despite the fact that his condition showed no improvement, they held out hope of his recovery, for twice during the past two years he had fought off attacks of the same disease.

Andrew McLean was born in Renton, Dumbartonshire, Scotland, on August 7, 1848. As a boy he was apprenticed to a carpenter, but not liking the work he ran away and shortly worked his way to New York on bark Agra. He arrived in the latter part of 1863 and at once enlisted in the United States Navy, serving as a powder-boy on the Kearsarge and the Monitor Chimo until the close of the war.

Then he worked for a time as a clerk in the store of his uncle Andrew in Brooklyn and attended a business college. When he was 20 he began newspaper work. At that time he boarded with the family of John Foord who was then on the editorial staff of the New York Times. His first newspaper work was done on the Brooklyn Times. Later he transferred to the Brooklyn Eagle, becoming city editor of that paper when he was 24 years old. He served as editor of the Eagle for several years. In 1886 left it to become the editor-in-chief of the Citizen, which he was instrumental in founding. This position re retained until his death.

In years gone by Mr. McLean wrote plays and published not a little poetry. In 1912 he was chairman of the Democratic Campaign Committee of Kings County and in 1915 was a delegate to the Constitutional Convention of the State of New York.

Mr. McLean and Miss Ida L. Thompson were married in 1876. He is survived by Mrs. McLean and two children, Mrs. Arthur M. Connett and David J. McLean, secretary-treasurer of the Citizen.

DOLLAR PULLERS

Advertising and circulation managers are always on the lookout for new ideas that will increase advertising receipts and win new circulation. Your idea for increasing advertising or circulation may not appeal to your manager, but it may be just the thing that some other manager wants. EDITOR & PUBLISHER will pay $1 for each idea printed under this head. The fact that the idea is now being used in your city does not bar it from the department. Address your communication to the DOLLAR PULLER EDITOR. When they appear clip them and mail them in and receive payment. Unavailable ideas will not be returned.

NEWSPAPER publishers, especially those who conduct genuine promotion campaigns, are always looking for new ideas in advertising copy. On page four of EDITOR & PUBLISHER, issue of November 25, a new note in trade paper advertising was sounded by the Philadelphia Bulletin, which is one of the most wide-awake advertisers among American newspapers. Having conducted regular, every-issue-campaigns in many trade papers (it has been an EDITOR & PUBLISHER advertiser every week for several years), the Bulletin has paved the way in copy styles and original ideas, but adapting the "movie" idea in its trade paper copy was done with especially striking effect. Yet, attractive as this style of copy was, the Bulletin is not "running it to death." Its promotion department believes in variety of expression, and contrives to change copy each week, thereby introducing a new constructive thought in each advertisement. Careful consideration of trade paper advertising is one of the best hunches that could possibly be presented to other publishers who are always wondering what they can do to increase their national advertising business.—J. B. K.

Department stores are always looking for ideas to make their advertising more interesting. They realize that daily advertisments featuring only descriptions and prices are likely to become monotonous; they do not contain enough "reader-interest." A Southern store added this valuable quality to its advertising by a series of articles appearing under the heading: "For Old Times' Sake; a Bit of City History." The first articles appeared in space outside the big store ad; but in a few days they became a part of the ads just as the store editorials used by a number of institutions. The history of the store, reminiscences and pictures of old employes, a little of the history of some of the other long-established firms in the city, interesting points in the city's history, old fashions, etc., all appeared in these articles. An attempt was made to bring the store's name or something about the store into each one of the articles.—J. T.

Here's an idea to pass along to your biggest men's wear store. C. F. Hovey Company of Boston is inviting men of the city to bring in their mussed neckties and get them pressed free of charge. This extra service makes friends and is a talking point for which extra copy can be used.—J. M. M.

To establish a farm news department, offer 5 cents an item to your correspondents for every item that is taken from their regular letters and printed in the farm news column. It will not be difficult to edit these notes so they can be separated from the correspondence, and with a designated mark the proofreader can give instructions for having them transfered while corrections are being made in the galleys. And then to avoid extra bookkeeping have the correspondents clip their own items and bring them to the office or send them in once a month or every three months to get their pay. The cost of each column will be about one dollar. Three or four columns will make a crackerjack department, worth more than either $3 or $4 as a subscription-getter. Any rural correspondence is bound to contain occasional items suitable for a farm news department, and as the correspondents learn the nature of the material you want, they will eagerly contribute numerous good farm news notes.—J. T.

Have you ever tried paying your carrier boys a small commissioner, say of ten cents, on every classified advertisement turned in? An objection to this is that the boys are likely to spend so much time in soliciting the ads that they delay the delivery of their papers. One paper has overcome this by having the carrier boys solicit classified advertising from their patrons on Saturday mornings and then notifying the patrons that on telephone request sent to the office the carrier will stop while on his delivery route for the copy and the pay.—W. H. M.

A menace to the advertising columns of a country newspaper is the advertiser who falls back on the old stereotyped statements such as "We carry the biggest and best line and sell at the lowest prices," "we defy competition," and "we lead, others follow." These sayings are so trite that they doubtless have little effect on the readers. But the other merchants in the same business read them with a darkening brow. "That's a lie," they say. "We got a bigger line than he has, and he can't undersell us, and he knows it." My point is that you should diplomatically attempt to weed such statements out of the copy turned in, and that you preach the doctrine of the power of the specific and the weakness of the generality.—J. T.

It would be an interesting and different stunt for a newspaper at this time of the year to put over some special pages of advertising on which would appear exclusively advertisements of firms handling goods which are particularly suited for giving to some specific member of the family. For instance, one page might be devoted to ads in which goods of particular appropriateness for giving to Dad could be featured. Another page could feature gifts appropriate for giving to Mother. And so on. Over each page should be a heading suggesting to the readers of the paper that they cut out of the pages and preserve them and use them as guides in buying gifts for the various members of the family. It shouldn't be very difficult to put over such a page.—F. H. W.

The most widely used sale idea among the department stores of Texas this fall is the one price sale of a quantity of dresses, of aprons or of suits. One of the best ways to display this kind of an advertisment is to run the sale price in the exact center of the space taken and to group the illustrations or descriptions of the merchandise around it. To the solicitor who really wants to help his advertisers merchandise their stocks, here is an idea that ought to be given to one of the patrons on his list.—J. T.

In most cities there are several stores which have Santa Clauses for the entertainment of the children at this time of he year. It should, therefore, be a comparatively easy matter for the paper to get up a page of ads of all the stores having Santa Clauses and to use phrotos of the individual Santa Clauses in the ads. Over the top of the page could be a heading urging folks to take their children to see all the Santas. And each ad could mention the other attractions at the stores in which the children would be interested. If necessary in order to get the page over the newspaper might designate some certain day as Santa Visiting Day on which all the Santas would give souvenirs to all the children calling on them.—F. H. W.

Down in Ballinger, Tex., the Young Men's Business League has made a contract with the Banner-Ledger to send the paper weekly to every family in the county for a period of three months. The scheme is designed to boost trade during the fall months. From the publisher's point of view, though, it is a fine opportunity to boost circulation. If you could make such an agreement with your advertisers, you would have the principal expense of a big circulation campaign taken care of without expense to yourself.—J. T.

There is a way for the advertising manager to put his display department on practically a cash basis by using the following method. Raise your rates sufficiently to allow a discount of ten per cent if the advertising bill is paid not later than the 15th of the month following. Print on the face of your advertising statement that the bill can be discounted ten per cent if paid on or before the 15th. Above all, rigidly enforce the payment of bills on the 15th to earn the discount and make the discount as high as ten per cent so that no advertiser can afford to lose it. Before using this method we had the usual trouble and expense in collecting our accounts. Now all of our accounts are paid promptly every month. No merchant dares to "pass up" a ten per cent discount.—C. H. A.

An excellent idea to increase interest in your classified ad section is to insert on the first or second page of the paper a blank profile of some well-known local business man. His name will be found among your want columns. A small, but attractive prize can be awarded the successful man or woman who can present his name. This will prove of great value on your "low" days. The profile on the first page which is generally read thoroughly will attract the attention of readers who upon noting the prize and the possibility of linking the profile of one of the names in the ads, will read through the latter with a great deal more concentration than usual.—R. W. S.

START LOCAL CHRISTMAS ADVERTISING EARLY

New York, adjures parents. "Others will give him the usual gift—make yours different. Collecting stamps is an excellent hobby—entertaining and educational. Our Junior Album at $3 or a complete loose-leaf Album at $100 will distinguish your gift on Christmas morning."

The manufacturer of the Eveready flashlight was among the earliest in the field with well-planned Christmas appeal. A liberal use of white space and hand lettering make the copy stand out on the newspaper page.

"The keenest pleasure of giving is yours—the pleasure of keenest shaving is his when your Christmas gift is an Eveready," American Safety Razor Corporation copy plays upon words in a full page, showing several dollar models.

Even tumblers can be advertised. The Nonik Glassware Corporation urges, "This Christmas give Nonik Glassware that doesn't break easily." A diagram in a circle shows a glass made by the corporation being thrown. The slogan, "The bulge protects the edge," is printed.

The copy states:

"Nonik fine glassware is manufactured in accord with a patented scientific principle that greatly reduces breakage. A graceful outward curve (patented Aug. 19, 1914) near the lip of the glass not only protects the edge by absorbing shocks, but serves to enhance the charm of each individual piece.

"The fact that Nonik Glassware is replacing ordinary glassware in homes everywhere is proof enough of its popularity. There is a style of Nonik Glassware for every character of table service. In addition, there is a complete line of styles for table service in hotels, restaurants and other institutions."

Rigaud of Paris, in a striking page advertisement a short time ago, illustrated 11 sets and individual articles.

"For Christmas Gifts, look at these manicure sets, each in a beautiful silver and blue wrapper," Northam Warren, who has built an immense business within a few years, intrigues. The new style of wrapper is shown.

One of the paragraphs in the copy brings out an especially worth while point:

"Whether you want a simple remembrance or a beautiful and distinctive gift that will remain a permanent possession—you have just the right set at exactly the price that your pocketbook can conveniently meet."

"When you give a book for Christmas, you pay a compliment to your friend," the Cosmopolitan Book Corporation claims in selling in newspaper space four of its book leaders. Large space is being used by the Encyclopædia Britannica to get decisions on its set, as a permanent value gift.

The magazines are showing their keen appreciation of the worth of newspapers to sell products. The Ladies' Home Journal in its full-page copy widely used for boosting its December issue says:

"Buy the December issue from your newsdealer—then order a subscription for all of 1923 for yourself or as a delightful extra gift for someone in your family or for a friend."

The announcement of the gift with a full-color copy of a Murillo Madonna, sent free, is proposed by the company. Could not the newspapers feature the gift subscription idea to a greater extent than heretofore?

Insurance as a Christmas gift is being advocated by Arnold Rothstein & Co., Inc., New York, described as "Insurance gift specialists."

"Make not only Christmas—but all his life worth while," the company says apropos of its plan. "Present him with insurance! He will appreciate it more than anything else you could give him: Insurance gift certificate. Our special distinctive feature facilitates this method of holiday distribution more conveniently than any other. They are convenient. They may be mailed in time to arrive for Christmas."

Why could not the bond houses develop this idea more than they have?

One newspaper is backing the thought, "Be in your own home by Christmas," in its real estate section.

Special illustrations and borders as well as copy are used by a considerable number of advertisers to create the cheery Christmas atmosphere. Others use their regular advertising with a dash of holly or some other incidental holiday touch. Still others, like Phoenix Hosiery, simply go ahead with their usual copy.

The kinds of merchandise and the concerns which can use Christmas copy are limitless. Interesting things in the department store field represent a complete study in itself.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER affirms that the power of the newspaper to create sales, both in tie-ups with special seasons and in "regular" advertising, is as yet only in small degree appreciated and that future Christmas seasons will see many more advertisers using this medium and doing it along numberless new lines.

Celebrating Syracuse Jubilee

The Syracuse (N. Y.) Herald is planning a special edition for December 13, in commemoration of the 75th anniversary of the city of Syracuse. Howard H. Smith, promotion manager, is working on a 16-page section which will depict history and advancement of Syracuse. The special edition will include the two regular news sections, colored comic section and the 16-page anniversary section.

The Birmingham (Ala.) News will hold its second annual closed car show from December 1 to 13. The News will publish a special section devoted to the show on December 10.

Asks Receiver for Maryland Paper

Charles L. Weymouth has filed a bill of complaint in the circuit court asking that a receiver be appointed to take charge of the affairs of the Cumberland (Md.) Leader Publishing Company, until recently a daily newspaper published in Cumberland. It is set out by Weymouth that he is a stockholder in the Leader, incorporated for $20,000 and that there has been $33,350 worth of capital stock issued; that the corporation is indebted to the People's Bank of Cumberland for $3,000, secured by first mortgage on the plant. Also that it owes debts on open accounts to persons and firms totaling $1,800, and is unable to pay on account of the depression, but could pay it if it could have time to adjust its business, and that the property is ample to meet its debts and much more. The paper ceased publication several months ago.

Fullerton News Control Sold

Mark L. Haas, former Seattle newspaperman and more recently associate editor of Pacific Ports magazine, and Albert Launer, an attorney, have purchased the controlling interest in the Fullerton (Cal.) Daily News from J. R. Gallemore. Following the change of control a meeting of the directors was held. Mr. Launer has been elected president; Mr. Hass, vice-president, editor and general manager, and L. O. Culp, secretary.

HUNCHES

Managing editor and city editors are always on the lookout for news; and, feature ideas that can be used locally. Editor & Publisher will pay $1 for each hunch published under this head. The fact that the hunch is not being worked successfully in your city does not bar it from thi department. Address your contributions to the Hunch Editor. When they appear, clip them and mail them in and receive payment. Unavailable hunches will not be returned.

ALMOST without exception, the country editors overlook the humorous side of life in their papers. One Ohio country weekly used a heading "Coaxing You to Smile" and once or twice a month printed several local jokes (without names sometimes) and enlivened the columns at least once a month with humorous anecdotes of prominent citizens. Such a feature creates interest in the paper aside from the strict news features.—A. K. C.

Do the clothing merchants of your city still give a pair of suspenders away with every suit of clothes? Find out if the elderly men of the city have taken to belts and why they have, if so. What do they think of the present day styles as compared with what they used to be? —E. M. H., Jr.

What's the skirtline in your city? The Boston Telegram recently managed to get a photo from knees down on a busy street showing that Hub skirts on the average have not fallen.—J. M. M.

In some states there is a considerable amount of agitation among motorists to get the state to use a good percentage of the money paid in for auto licenses in repairing and paving streets instead of spending this money for country road work. The argument of the motorists favoring this is that they seldom get out into the country and that there is a big class of motorists who never leave the city streets. What would the motorists in YOUR town think of this proposition? Get up a good story along this line.—F. H. W.

A story that is timely and will tend to make persons more careful is a roundup of how many men, women and children have been killed by motor vehicles since January 1. Print their names. Compare list with previous years. Then follow it up with a couple of interviews from Traffic policy.—B.

What do the ministers preach on nowadays? A writer in a recent number of the Christian Herald said that he has not heard a sermon on "repentance" in five years. Evidently topics are changing. Get your information from ministers direct, from back numbers of your Saturday editions, if the topics were listed, or from church calendars. You'll get a good story.—G. H. D.

The Grand army men have almost gone. The formation of the local post, the names of the first commander with the other officers with a reference to the survivors will prove interesting. This subject is becoming more and more important as the men go. Some posts have been allowed to die out without a word of reference to the fact.—E. M. H., Jr.

Some people in your city have had Christmases in the trenches in France, fighting in the Spanish-American war, or battling in the Civil War. Others have had Christmases in strange countries, on the high seas and under ground in mines. Interview some of your most prominent citizens about their strangest Christmases and get a good collection of tales along the line suggested above. Then run this feature, with photos of the folks interviewed, on the Saturday or Sunday before Christmas. —F. H. W.

Start a symposium on "What is your idea of the softest job?"—H. D. K.

What is the chance of your city having a white Christmas this year? People are always interested in having white Christmases. Go over the records in your paper for the past twenty-five Christmases and get up an interesting story from these records telling how many Christmases were white, how many green, how many rainy, and so on.—F. H. W.

The Boston Telegram each day is printing the photograph of a baby, and for each one printed a baby spoon is awarded as a prize.—C. L. M.

What resolutions are the members of your city administration going to make on New Year's day? An interesting, snappy and rather unusual story could be easily prepared along this line.—F. H. W.

How's the baby market in your city? Are bookings at the maternity hospitals on the increase? Are people adopting more orphans? Or is the reverse true? One paper found that reservations had been made at one maternity hospital for seven months in advance and there was a big boom in births in sight.—G. W. G.

"Does it pay to keep chickens in town, where you have to buy their feed?" This is an unsettled question, but should not be such. People who have always had chickens in town should be able to solve this question. Invite contributions on this subject and let the contributors tell just how much they have made or lost on chickens, in town.—B. F. C.

Who have the most valuable dogs in your city? A little investigation along this line would reveal some interesting facts which could be woven into a very interesting and rather unusual story.—F. H. W.

What's the best thing for a grouch? Pass it on to someone else. With this idea in view, an Ohio newspaper ran a column headed "Here's why I am carrying a grouch." Subscribers were asked to write about their troubles in 50 words for use in this column. Initials were used when request that names be left out was made.—B. A. T.

What could the amateur artists in your city do toward evolving characters which would be interesting enough for use in daily comic strips? Why not run a contest to bring out local amateur talent along this line? It would be different from the customary cartoon contests and would, therefore, make a big hit with most of the amateur artists in your city. —F. H. W.

Who own the banks of your town? From the assessor's reports, get and print lists of the stockholders, with the number of shares held by each. Are the persons who own your banks home folks or are they "foreigners?" A middle western paper worked up a good feature story on this subject.—L. H. H.

Interview the local high school or college teachers about their hardest working students. Stories about the boy who works in a telegraph office at night and goes to school by day, or the girl who gets up at half-past four every morning in order to take care of a motherless household and go to school will prove a popular series.—M. F. W.

"While the city sleeps" recently proved a profitable subject for a special section of the Boston Herald, devoted to stories and paid advertisements about milk, fish, market and others who help feed a city.—J. M. M.

By and large, I reckon there is no topic which interests so many people as the weather. Did you ever try a daily weather prognostication, independent of the government service? The g. s. gives out a heap of bum dope on local meteorological conditions in many localities. Whether your forecast for tomorrow or the day following is correct or not, folks will enjoy it. You can do as good a job of forecasting as anybody can, and if you happen to guess it fairly well for the greater part of a season, you will become famous as a seer amongst your readers; at the worst, no matter how far wide of the mark you hit, the feature will have a humorous value. Either way, the paper will get into closer touch with the vast army of weather conversationalists and there is no stinger. What more could you ask?—D. H. T.

Have you ever interviewed a taxidermist for a local feature story? The story of his work and something about the specimens he has handled will make interesting reading.—J. T.

People are thinking about taxes right now. Find how much local taxes have increased the last ten years. Then get the statistics on increases in population. Let the city officials tell why local taxes have been advancing so rapidly.—J. T.

Were there any eccentric characters in your city or district fifty years ago, men and women who gained a local reputation because of their strange habits? A feature writer on the staff of The St. Thomas (Ontario, Canada) Times-Journal has discovered that there were many such persons in that locality four or five decades ago and interviews with old-timers has brought to light many interesting stories, rich in superstition and the unexplainable. The articles are used in the Saturday editions and are very popular with the reading public. Among the characters unearthed were a mystery man, a witch woman who disappeared never to be seen again, several hermits and a harmless lunatic who wandered around the country gathering the fallen plumage of birds.—L. All Newspaper Space Has An Advertising Value

EVERY now and again any one delving into the mysteries of advertising results confronts a hard-headed shopkeeper who insists that advertising does not pay and that he cannot get the results he used to. He will berate one newspaper and then another, claiming that they are no good. The chances are that his copy is not right or that through uncertain dealing with customers he can create no confidence on the part of the public in his sales.

Every unit of newspaper circulation has a value to the man able to use it to his advantage. His copy must be keyed to the line of his readers and his offerings must be such as they respond to.

Casual observation in any city or town shows that the stores which regularly advertise have built up a profitable clientele and are the stores most women shop in. There is an added confidence attained by the merchant who advertises and makes good to his customers. Women are naturally suspicious of the non-advertising store that is merely a store where she may be swindled by irresponsible traders.

Our public has been educated to have maximum confidence in those stores which have spent millions of dollars in advertising to create customer confidence.

Likewise it is the newspapers which carry the heavy offerings of the highest type of local shops which are the best advertising mediums for the national advertiser.

The presence of such advertising creates a market-place, as it were, and it is obvious that it would not be carried day in and day out unless it produced practically overnight results.

Successful Investors in Advertising are the "merchant princes" of the world

They invest in advertising as judiciously as they invest in other first class securities—with scientific judgment, placing the bulk of their business in those mediums which bring safe and profitable returns.

The newcomer in any advertising field cannot do better than follow the lead of those experienced and successful advertisers whose business enterprises are monuments to their sound advertising investments. Where these investors place the greater proportion of their advertising it is expedient for other advertisers to follow.

The Eyes of Over 5,000,000

will see your message when placed in this list of daily newspapers.

Pennsylvania people, 8,720,017 of them comprise 8.2 per cent of the population of the United States.

78.7 per cent are native born whites
18.8 per cent are foreign born
2.5 per cent are negroes

One hundred and seventy cities of over 5,000 population claim 58 per cent of the total population.

Forty-two per cent live in towns of less than 5,000 or on farms.

Pennsylvania's diversified industries, its tremendous activities and the constant demand for Pennsylvania products, make busy, smoky, hustling communities, where big money is made and spent constantly.

These Pennsylvania daily newspapers are splendidly prepared to render exceptionally efficient service to national advertisers at a very low cost per line per thousand circulation.

Cleveland Merchants Prefer

THE PRESS

DURING November THE CLEVELAND PRESS published more local advertising than either The News or Plain Dealer by 13,210 inches and 18,725 inches respectively.

Here are the figures for November 1922

	1922	GAIN OVER 1921
PRESS	59,762 inches	4,043 inches
Plain Dealer	41,037 inches	2,716 inches
News	46,552 inches	2,553 inches

The PRESS exceeded the Plain Dealer by 18,725 inches
The PRESS exceeded the News by 13,210 inches

These are the daily figures only as The Cleveland Press does not publish a Sunday newspaper.*

An analysis of the first eleven months advertising of this year shows that THE CLEVELAND PRESS published 6,583 more inches of local display advertising than the Daily and Sunday Plain Dealer combined; 407,852 inches in excess of The Leader-News and 114,108 inches in excess of The News.

Philadelphia's

ANNUAL AUTOMOBILE SHOW

At the big automobile show, to be held January 13 to January 20, 1923, in Philadelphia's Cmmercial Museum, interest of prospective buyers will centre in the cars with which they are familiar—the cars that they "know."

You can guide these prospects to your space — make them regard your models as cars they know. You can reach nearly every Philadelphian who is in the market for a new car by advertising in The Bulletin.

Many manufacturers, advertising agencies, local factory branches and dealers are reserving space in The Bulletin during the Auto Show.

rld Events Will Be Written for the Farmer and City-Dweller, Says Dr. Bleyer, Who Sees Low Pay and High Turnover of News Staffs as Journalism's Big Weakness

By ARTHUR T. ROBB, Jr.

VE world and national news a ie-up with local affairs.
ild a staff of local reporters. Pay salaries that will enable them to n in newspaper work, marry and families on its rewards and itute a department that will be, in what it is nominally—the back- of a newspaper's service to its unity.

at is the cure for the chief news- ills of today advanced by Dr. rd G. Bleyer, professor of alism at the University of Wisconwho is now in New York on his to a year's travel and study in pe—the first sabbatical year that nterrupted his 25 years of teaching st of it given to future newspaper rs, executives and employes.

. Bleyer, whose teachings were ded by several years of newspaper , has never lost touch with his ssion. He is a close reader of newspapers, a student of their iarities and their progress since the tion of modern American newsrs eighty years ago. And he is not nistic.

merican newspapers today are r in every respect than they have at any time in the newspaper ry of the United States," he said week. Their news columns are er and more significant than ever. advertising columns no longer er the fake medical copy that was ney had a few years ago. Crime is ed more and more on its genuine value and not for its appeal to id or sex instincts. Editorials are for interpretation of news and the htenment of readers and not for the ncement of the editor's private 's or for scurrilous attacks upon ellow editors.

here are, however, some interesting lels between journalistic develops today and those of eighty years For instance, we are accustomed ink of the tabloid newspaper, like Daily News in New York, as a ly new idea. It isn't at all. The d paper with a wide popular appeal large circulation was seen first in amin Day's old New York Sun, lished in 1833.

hat was a tabloid paper much like Daily News. So was the Transcript, lished in 1834, and the Herald in The Daily News today has the kind of mass circulation that the Sun had. Their news is fundamenof the same character, although reatment is rather different. The had only one local reporter and he stationed at what they called the e office, which seems to have been ombination of the present headers room and the night court. The e office opened at 3 a. m. and ined open until 8 p. m., and this ter stayed there from beginning to His news was of the petty crimes, kenness, disorderly conduct, wifeng, and similar offenses. It was en in humorous fashion. Dialogue een the magistrate and the prisoners reproduced to bring out funny and human interest anecdotes. Criminal trials were reported in great detail and with 'spice' that would cause the arrest of the editor were it to be tried today.

"Monstrosities of all kinds—birth of triplets, or quadruplets, or curiously malformed children or animals, then to a greater extent than now, was favored news.

"Naturally, this had an appeal for the masses, just as the Daily News reaches them with its interestingly-written stories of criminal trials, or love letters, and the triumphs and troubles of pretty girls.

"The Sun and the other tabloid papers sold for one penny, which was an additional appeal for wide circulation. The established papers sold for six cents a copy, but none of them was ever circulated by street sales. They were delivered to subscribers at the rate of $10 per subscription. Their circulation was small. The eleven daily papers of the year when the Sun started had a total circulation of 26,500 copies a day. The Courier and Enquirer, edited by James Watson Webb, had a circulation of 4,500 copies. The Evening Post circulated about 4,000 copies.

"The older papers made great efforts to get foreign news, but there was little local reporting. It was quite usual for the editor to note that 'we have just been informed that a large warehouse in Fulton street is burning, but have not been able to confirm it.'

"That kind of news and the high price meant that when the workingman wanted to read the newspapers, he found them at the pubs, and the ale-houses. But he bought the Sun, which in a few years had the largest newspaper circulation in the world—20,000 copies a day. The next largest was the London Times, with 17,000 circulation. Taxes on newspapers, on advertising and paper, made British papers of that day cost 14 cents a copy."

Asked whether he would venture a prediction on the next development in the cycle of journalism, Dr. Bleyer smiled. "Prophecy is dangerous business. It's safer to talk about what has happened."

"Local news gradually came into these early modern papers, displacing the miscellany which had filled two or three of the available four pages," he continued Advertising income increased and reporters were added to the staff to secure the 'local ends' of stories which were brought by pony expresses and later by telegraph from other cities. Their early inaccuracies in reporting, due to insufficient staffs and inefficient methods of handling news and news-getters, have descended to present-day journalism, though probably in lessened degree. Advertising troubles of the past few years are also traceable back to the patent medicine days of the thirties, when the medicine men were the only ones who understood the value of newspaper advertising in putting their goods before the public. That has been largely set to rights now, but the early unchecked statements made in advertising set precedents that have been difficult to overcome.

"There is relatively less news inaccuracy, too. News in the old days was brought into the office. No reporters were available to investigate and verify the tips. Local news was relatively unimportant, but great sums of money and unlimited effort went into securing first reports on foreign affairs.

"News from abroad is taking an increasingly important place in today's news also, but even now there is little interest in the Middle West in what is going on in Europe and Asia. The newspapers are presenting the story as it unfolds day by day, as well as they can, but they can't make people read it. President Butler was more or less right when he said that modern journalism with its headline reading was raising superficiality to the plane of an occupation.

"What the newspapers will have to solve is the problem of bringing home the significance of foreign events in terms that will be understood by its townsfolk. They will have to connect the story of events at Washington and abroad with the home and business interests of Americans, to show the relation of international peace, and commerce, or their lack, to the price of wheat which the American farmer can get.

"The New York Herald did that very well in its campaign against the tariff during the summer and fall. Its editors took the tariff bill clause by clause and showed how each levy on products in common use would be reflected in the budget of the working man and woman. That was making news intelligible and driving home, so that they could not be misunderstood, the editor's arguments against the legislation."

It was suggested to Dr. Bleyer that the Herald's campaign involved the daily publication of editorials on the front page, rather than the editorial page, and might tend thereby to distract the reader from the regular editorials on other subjects of importance which could not be given front-page treatment.

"Possibly that is true," he replied. "If so, it adds force to the argument that the interpretation must be written by the newspaper's reporters and correspondents into the news and by the copy desk into the headlines on news of that character. Partisanship doesn't belong in interpretative news, which will have to be written by men—at London, Paris, Tokyo, or Washington—who understand their subject thoroughly and who know their newspaper's readers and their home life and business activities. They will take time to analyze their story thoroughly and to present their analysis in clear language."

"That kind of work can't be done," the interviewer remarked, "by many newspaper men today, nor at the speed with which modern newspapers are produced. As one New York newspaper man said in talking of the King-Crane report on the Near East recently published by EDITOR & PUBLISHER, 'it was too long and too hard to read, so we took the lead and the end, put in a few of the names and let it go.' The press associations were unable to handle that story because it was too long to analyze in the few moments that they have available for any news. A man can't take a complicated national or international situation and write a comprehensive report of it in three or four hours."

"There is no question but that speed is badly overdone in our newspapers," Dr. Bleyer agreed. "A press association superintendent in Chicago told me a few days ago that his organization could give its clients far better service if it could take more time on many news stories, if it could hold them twelve hours and go into the detail that the story needed to be comprehensible. But competition won't permit it. You know how quickly a news association hears from the country

"It cannot be repeated too often that local news is what makes a newspaper and the publisher who sees to it that his local news is interesting and accurate and that his news from other cities and countries is given a local application is getting back to bed-rock principles of journalism on which more than one American success has been built."—Prof. Willard G. Bleyer.

if its wires are not carrying a story that the opposition has.

"That will probably be changed slowly. As I see the newspaper of the future, it will place more emphasis on significant news and its local effects and this will gradually displace the non-news entertainment features that are crowding our newspapers today. Newspaper publishers will probably realize some day that the magazines can give the people all the written entertainment that they need and that the successful magazines can do it twice as well as the best newspaper can.

"Now the newspaper publisher will tell you that he has to have features to differentiate his newspaper from all the others that are published to hold his circulation; that local and national news are standardized. I'll answer that by saying that features also are becoming standardized, are standardized, in fact. Each kind uses the same ideas, almost the same words, day after day. Features have largely ceased to be original.

"Some publishers will one of these days wake up to the possibility of establishing supremacy by getting off the beaten tracks of news. They will make interesting reading replace for their readers the matter which now neither informs nor amuses, though intended to do both.

"That, of course, means that newspaper reporters and editors will have to have a better training than is now required. It means that the standards of efficiency that have come into vogue in newspaper business offices during the past thirty years will be extended to the editorial rooms. All the administrative progress that newspapers have made since the nineties has been in the advertising, circulation, and management departments. In general, editorial and news staffs are conducted along lines that were laid down as the popular journal of 70 years ago developed.

"One factor which has, more than any other, made for inaccuracy and inefficiency in newspaper reporting is the high labor turnover among the news-gathering force. The reader can judge of the accuracy of his newspaper only by its reports of incidents with which he is acquainted. If it gets its facts straight in them, spells his name and those of his friends correctly and tells the story as if it knew the circumstance unstated but implied, the reader will believe that his is a good, accurate newspaper. But one slight error of fact, or misspelling of a name, will upset its good reputation.

"Now, tell me if you can, how a reporter who has been with a newspaper for two or three months, after serving for similar periods on half a dozen newspapers in widely scattered cities, can possibly write an accurate report of an important function, involving perhaps the history of a number of families and the city's municipal affairs for ten years past without the possibility of errors that will discredit him and his paper among people who know the truth? It takes a good reporter a year at least to learn all the facts that he should know about his paper, its city and the people in order to call himself well informed. He will not consciously misrepresent facts in writing his stories, but his lack of information, that is vital but not apparent, will cause him to color his news according to his own interpretation of the facts that he sees.

"No commercial jobbing house of my acquaintance would think of changing its salesmen as often as the newspaper permits its news staff to turn over. The salesman creates good will in increasing amount with every call that he makes on his trade. That good will is lost and must be rebuilt by the salesman who replaces him, with the chance that it is lost forever. The newspaper man who stays with his paper gathers an ever-widening circle of acquaintances and good friends, news sources, and centers of good will for the institution he represents. Newcomers are never accepted immediately. They can get routine news, which the paper could probably get if it did not employ any reporters, but they cannot get the information that they should have on topics of public interest until they have been tried and found worthy of trust by the people upon whom they must depend for their news.

"Newspaper publishers will all tell you that they consider local news the backbone of their paper, without which they could not publish. They profess that belief; but few of them carry it into practice by paying salaries to the men who get the local news that will permit them to remain reporters. They limit their city editors' appropriation to an amount that will provide a few pittances for local men, whose job demands an unremitting attention to business and alertness that is required in few other vocations.

"While this condition prevails, it is futile to wonder why reporters give up newspaper positions for highly-paid publicity work. A reporter wants a home and the opportunity to bring up a family and often he cannot do so on the usual newspaper salary. Then the newspaper replaces him with a cub and in a short while replaces that cub with another.

"A recent graduate of the Wisconsin school of journalism completed the course in June, was employed by a leading Wisconsin newspaper and in October wrote me that she was the second oldest employee in point of service on the staff. The oldest employee was a man who had been with the paper for 20 years or more and would probably spend his life there. Now, how can a newspaper with such conditions on its staff—and there are many similar cases—present a true picture of its local affairs.

"American journalists' ignorance of foreign affairs has been well known since the Versailles conference. The men there were the best American newspapers had, but they had given no study to European politics, or questions of economics, and some of their errors were ludicrous. America was vitally interested in what went on at Versailles, but its press couldn't paint an accurate picture of what transpired. Its reporters simply didn't know what was happening and could not put it into terms that their readers in this country could understand.

"The schools of journalism and the numbers of college-trained men now entering newspaper work are effecting beneficial changes in that respect, but the schools of journalism can't solve the problem.

"It is up to the newspapers themselves. They have trained their advertising staffs into knowing intimately the business of their advertisers. They have made their circulation managers salesmen of the newspaper product. They are paying salaries in the business departments that attract and hold capable solicitors and executives. But they attempt to report developments of world-wide significance through the agency of men whose contact with world affairs has been through the police courts and the city hall, who have had no leisure or inducements to read and study the principles and the past developments of the larger fields. They expect these men to do an expert's work in these wider fields with an amateur's mental equipment and police reporter's pay. There is the weakness, and the remedy lies in the application to the news and editorial staffs of the same efficiency principles that have made the business forces able to keep pace with the developments of recent years.

"General Taylor of the Boston Globe was credited with a formula for newspaper success that has often been worked out with excellent results—Get the name of every reader into your columns at least once a year. Of course that can be carried too far—to the extent of reporting trivial local incidents that interest only those concerned—but if handled with judgment by a local staff which is paid well enough to stay with the paper and know without question news value of these little incidents, the policy cannot fail.

"It cannot be repeated too often that local news is what makes a newspaper and the publisher who sees to it that his local news is interesting, and accurate, and that his news from other cities and other countries is given a local application wherever possible, is getting back to bed-rock principles of journalism on which more than one American success has been built.

"The promise of trained men for the next generation is being fulfilled. Ten years ago we had the first conference of teachers of journalism, with hardly more than a dozen institutions represented. Today over 200 American schools and colleges are giving instruction in suubjects that are of value to journalists, with that end in view, and the number is growing. Graduates of journalism schools have demonstrated their value, but the services of many have been lost to the daily newspapers because the magazines and publicity enterprises offer more attractive money inducements. We can produce the men with the training that a newspaper man should have before he enters the profession, but it is distinctly up to the newspapers to care for them after that."

Dr. Bleyer is going to spend the next year in Europe, his first leave from the University of Wisconsin since he left newspaper work in 1898 to become a teacher.

CONGRESS PLAYS POLITICS WITH MAIL RATE REDUCTIONS ON PUBLICATIONS

Vote to Delay Action on Kelly Bill Reveals That Six Members of House Committee Failed to Keep Pledges to Publishers—Committee Favors Fund for Joint Investigation

By SAM BELL

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 14.—Action of the House Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads in postponing consideration of the Kelly bill for elimination of the last two increases in second class postal rates has aroused the publishing interests to the realization that an open fight must be made to remove the war-time taxes.

The committee's vote of 10 to 5 on Tuesday, which was taken upon a motion to delay action on the bill until Joint Postal Commission should report on its investigation into the costs of handling the various classes of mail matter, came as a surprise to the publishers, and revealed the fact that six members of the committee failed in their pledges to take favorable action on the measure at this time. A report on the bill was postponed last June on the same pretext with the understanding that Joint Postal Commission would report on mail costs by December 1. The report has not been made and no date has been designated for its final submission.

That politics played an important part in the committee's postponement is seen by the publishers in the fact that committee on Tuesday also passed a resolution asking Congress to appropriate $963,000 to defray the expenses of the Joint Postal Commission, which is composed of the five ranking members of the Post Office committee and five members of the Senate Postal Committee. Inquiry has disclosed there is little disposition on the part of the majority of Congressmen to authorize this expenditure of nearly $1,000,000 for the commission to spend at this time on weighing tests, although the proposal has the tacit endorsement of Postmaster General Work and was discussed in his annual report.

It is apparent to the publishers, who recently held a three-day conference in Washington to get in touch with sentiment on the Kelly bill, that the House committee is detained to withhold action in an effort to further the work of the Joint Postal Commission and retain the patronage and privilege which goes with the activities of the Commission. It is said that the Commission already has spent a large amount of Government funds without definite results. It is the complaint of the publishing interests that the funds never have been used for practical investigation into the costs of handling mail and the money usually has been eaten up in traveling expenses for members of the Commission and their clerks.

The publishers recently volunteered to help the Commission and the Post Office Department in making the investigations, but the assistance apparently has not been desired. The first and only test of mail weighing conducted in Baltimore several months ago, convinced representatives of the publishing industry that the Commission was little interested and the work was turned over to minor officials of the Post Office Department.

Information obtained in Washington this week showed that publishers of all sections holding membership in the organizations making up the American Publishers Conference are keenly disappointed over the action of the committee members who had promised the various publishing associations to support the Kelly bill.

Rep. Kelly was supported in his effort to get favorable action by Reps. Griest and Kendall of Pennsylvania; Moore of Ohio and Patterson of Missouri. Rep. Guy U. Hardy of Colorado is understood to have led the attack on the bill and Rep. Ramseyer, of Iowa, who will become a member of the Joint Postal Commission as the result of the retirement of Rep. Steenerson of Minnesota, also was active in opposition to the measure. Besides Reps. Hardy and Ramseyer, those who voted in favor of the postponement were Ketcham of Michigan; Sanders of New York; Paige of Massachusetts, all Republicans and Bell of Georgia; Rouse of Kentucky; Woods of Virginia; Bowling of Alabama and Smithwick of Florida. Rep. Olpp of New Jersey left the meeting without voting and Chairman Steenerson did not vote. Rep. Mead, Democrat, New York, Gorman, Republican of Illinois and Woodward of West Virginia were absent.

According to the word which had been sent out to the publishing interests, the members of the committee who failed in their promises were Hardy, Sanders, Ketcham, Woods, Bowling and Smithwick. Representative Griest, of Pennsylvania, was the only member of the committee, who also is a member of the Joint Postal Commission, who refused to join the faction favoring postponement.

APPROVE LISTING OF CORPS

Will Not Go Into Effect Until Next Congress

Proposals of the Standing Committee of Washington Correspondents to list all bona fide newspaper men in the Congressional Directory and provide regulations for the seating of correspondents in the press galleries on days of special occasion at the Capitol has been given full approval by the gallery membership. The change in the manner of listing correspondents will not go into effect until the next Congress, because the directory of the final session of the sixty-seventh has been issued.

Under the present rule news services and single newspapers are entitled to list only three men in the directory, and press associations nine. Under the new regulations chiefs of bureaus and all those whose chief attention is given to reporting the activities of the Federal Government, will be eligible for the listing, which carries with it full gallery membership.

The change voted for handling the seats in the gallery upon days when the demand usually exceeds the number of seats, provides for the issuance of work tickets, one to a newspaper or news service and two to a press association, for gallery seats to be reserved until the program for which the seats are reserved gets under way. Immediately after the joint session of Congress convenes the reserve seat privilege is to be withdrawn and the seats thrown open to all. The rule is designed to prevent the crowding of the galleries on important occasions with reporters who are not actually assigned there and are not working on the story.

EVENING STAR INCORPORATES

Plans to Publish Evening Newspaper in Saginaw

(By Telegraph to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

LANSING, Mich., Dec. 13.—Incorporation papers were filed with the Secretary of State here today by the Saginaw Evening Star Company, a corporation which, it is understood, plans to start an afternoon daily in Saginaw within the next few weeks. Incorporators are Robert J. Brown, president; Edward M. Lucas, vice-president, and Henry L. Freking, secretary-treasurer. Each owns 30 shares of preferred stock and five shares of non-par value stock.

The company is capitalized at $40,000 in preferred stock, with 6,000 shares of common stock of no par value, the latter being valued at $6.67 apiece. Total paid in capital, $10,000. Edward M. Lucas, vice-president of the new concern, was one of the founders and for some time managing editor of the Lansing Capital News, now operating under a receivership. Mr. Lucas disposed of his holdings here several months ago to Bert M. Garstin. The only daily newspaper now being published in Saginaw is the Saginaw News-Courier, a Booth publication.

Convicted for Passing Bad Checks

Frederick S. Drexel, who resigned as artist in the advertising staff of the Hagerstown (Md.) Herald-Mail to open his own advertising agency in Hagerstown, the Drexel Advertising Agency, was recently found guilty of obtaining money under false pretenses. He passed worthless checks which resulted in his arrest and trial before Judge Wagaman in the Washington Coonty Court. Mr. Drexel was arrested in June in New York and has been in the Washington County jail since then. It is understood that his former home was in Chicago.

NO PHOTO ENGRAVING HEARING DATE SET

Federal Trade Commission Refuses to Give Out Informant's Names in Board of Trade and Union Case

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 13.—Officials of the Federal Trade Commission announced today that no date had been set for hearing on the Commission's complaint against the Photo-Engravers Board of Trade of New York, Inc., and the New York Photo-Engravers' Union No. 1, citing the officers and members of both organizations to show cause why the Commission should not act on an agreement said to exist whereby a uniform scale of prices for photo-engraving products is maintained. No answer to the Commission's formal notice of the complaint has been received, officials said, and no further action will be taken until the thirty-day limit for the filing of the answer has expired.

The complaint was issued by the Commission, upon information placed before it by persons whose names the Commission, in keeping with its usual procedure, declines to reveal. Under the law the Commission always is the complainant in any action and the word "complaint" in the usage of the Commission means hardly more than a notice that the Commission is about to make an investigation. In no sense, officials said today, does it mean that those against whom the "complaint" is filed are accused of illegal activities.

Before the Commission could issue formal complaint it was necessary for its members to assume that photo-engravings were commodities and subject to the regulations of interstate commerce, and the Commission made this assumption. After hearings the Commission will either dismiss the complaint or issue an order calling upon the two organizations "to cease and desist" from further activities under the alleged price-fixing agreement.

The Commission has entered formal complaints for false and misleading advertising against the Mid-American Oil & Refining Company, Fort Worth, Tex.; the United Woolen Mills, Washington; John McQuade & Co., Inc., Brooklyn, N. Y.; and has ordered the following to cease and desist false and misleading advertising: C. H. Parker Company, Valparaiso, Ind.; the Pure Silk Hosiery Mills, Chicago; the Imperial Products Company, Dallas, Tex.; the Hub Hosiery Mills, Boston; the Alamance Hosiery Mills, Burlington, N. C.; Nolde & Horst Company, Reading, Pa.; the Hancock Knitting Mills, Philadelphia; Daum, Rogers Spritzer Company, New York; the Fidelity Knitting Mills, Philadelphia; Rockford Mitten & Hosiery Company, Rockford, Ill.; Moore & Fisher, New York, and Sulloway Mills, Franklin, N. H. Cases ordered dismissed by the Commission include Bayer Company, Inc., New York; G. H. Hammond Company, Chicago; Morris & Co., Chicago; Wilson & Co., Inc., Chicago; Deep Wells Oil Company, San Antonio, Tex.; and Prest-O-Lite Company, Inc., New York.

PAYS INDEX-REPUBLICAN DEBTS

Unsecured Creditors Only One-Third of Their Claims

Creditors of the Bellefontaine (Ohio) Index-Republican, whose claims were unsecured by notes, received but 33⅓ per cent of the amount of their claims under the distribution of the $12,000 paid for the newspaper at receiver's sale recently by F. N. Johnson, wholesale grocer, of Bellefontaine.

After meeting the claims of the secured creditors, the balance of $5,623.85 was distributed pro rata by J. C. Martin, receiver, among the unsecured creditors whose claims totaled $16,913.86. The distribution was approved by the common pleas court, which had named the receiver at the application of stockholders some months ago.

WANAMAKER, DISCOVERER OF DAILY PAPER ADVERTISING, PASSES AWAY

Revolutionized Merchandising Methods and Fathered Parcel Post System—His "News of the Store" Style of Copy Followed the World Over

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 12. — The death of John Wanamaker at his home in this city today removes from the business world not only one of its most noted merchants, but also the most persistent believer in newspaper advertising the world has ever known. Mr. Wanamaker has spent more money in advertising in the newspapers than any individual or corporation in business anywhere. His annual appropriations have not only been unusually great, but he kept persistently at it—day after day—for more than sixty years.

Mr. Wanamaker, too, was interested in the ownership of several newspapers, the Wanamaker family being credited with heavy financial interests in the Philadelphia North American and the Philadelphia Record and, until it suspended publication, in the Philadelphia Evening Telegraph.

As Postmaster-General of the United States under President Harrison, he became known as the "Father of the Parcel Post" and one of the early proponents of rural free delivery and postal savings.

The death of Mr. Wanamaker is not expected to cause any change in the ownership. The Wanamaker interests being retained in the family as represented by Rodman Wanamaker, of New York, who took active hold of these newspaper interests on the death, some years ago, of Thomas B. Wanamaker, his brother.

When Mr. Wanamaker opened his initial mercantile establishment in Philadelphia, he spent all of the first year's profits in advertising.

The basis of Mr. Wanamaker's whole fortune was his first savings of $1,900, a part of which was his salary from the Y. M. C. A.

"I saw that if I was to become a clerk, however efficient, and stay a clerk, I never could use my mind and will in commerce and approach vague results I felt to be possible," he said in one of his reminiscenses. "When I had the $1,900, I took Mr. Brown, who subsequently became my father-in-law, and who had about $2,000, into partnership, and thus practically with $4,000 I began the clothing business."

The "Mr. Brown" referred to was Nathan Brown, the firm name being Wanamaker & Brown. Col. Bennett's success in conducting "Tower Hall" probably suggested to them the naming of their place "Oak Hall." It was at the southeast corner of Sixth and Market streets. This establishment is still known by that name, the clothing business having been continued there for many years by his brother, William H. Wanamaker.

"Oak Hall" was a success from the start. One of the first things Mr. Wanamaker did was to engage the best clothing salesman he knew in Philadelphia, whom he agreed to pay $1,350 a year—one-third the entire capital of the new concern. As it turned out, there was wisdom in this seeming recklessness. It increased the firm's credit and being talked about advertised their business. It is said that Mr. Wanamaker delivered his first order in a wheelbarrow, and put the money into a newspaper advertisement.

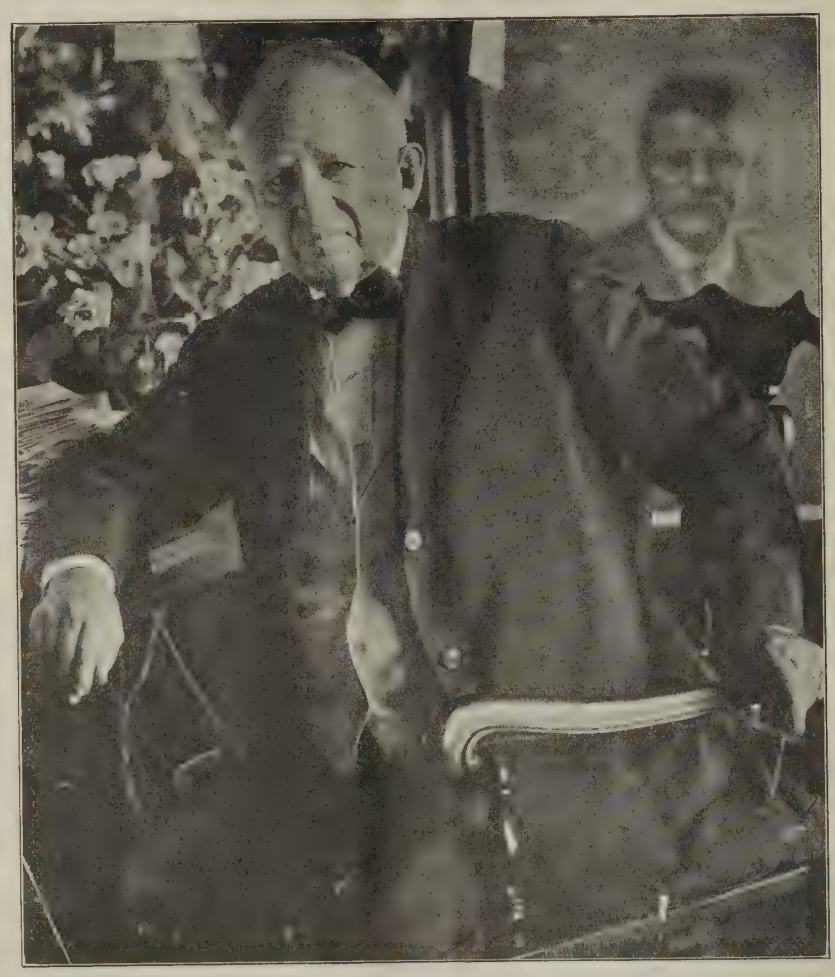
He was awake to the value of indirect, as well as direct, advertisement. Compared with the varied and extensive system of advertisement pursued today by successful mercantile enterprises, the methods thirty years ago appear primitive and crude. Col. Bennett, the proprietor of Tower Hall, was a noted clothier of his day, and Mr. Wanamaker spoke of him in after years as "a bright advertiser." His announcements appeared in entertaining rhymes, written by one of his employes, known as the "Bard of Tower Hall."

This method was distinctive with Col. Bennett. Mr. Wannamaker, whose Oak Hall was not many feet distant from Tower Hall, was equally disinctive, but his methods were more original.

Manly M. Gillam, a noted writer of advertisements, has told in a sketch of Mr. Wanamaker how Philadelphia awoke one morning to find "W. & B." in the form of six-inch-square posters stuck up all over the town. The whole city was soon talking and wondering what this sign meant.

After a few days a second poster modestly stated that Wanamaker & Brown had begun to sell clothing at Oak Hall. Before long, Mr. Gillam says, there were great signs, each 100 feet in length, painted on special fences built in a dozen places about the city, particularly near the railroad stations.

Another of Mr. Wanamaker's original devices, since copied by many, was to send up balloons. To each person who brought one of these back to the store he gave a suit of clothes. The balloons—twenty feet high—were made on the roof of Oak Hall.



Soon after tally-ho coaching began to be a fad, Mr. Gillam says, a fine coach was procured. Six large and spirited horses were used, instead of four, and Oak Hill employees, dressed in the style of the ultra-coaching set, traversed the country in every direction, scattering advertising matter to the music of the horn.

In newspaper advertising Mr. Wanamaker was farther in advance. The statements of store news were crisp and unhackneyed and the first artistic illustrations ever put into advertisements were used there. So high was the grade of this picture work that the world-famous Shakespearean scholar, Dr. Horace Howard Furness, treasured the original sketches of the "seven ages" as among the most interesting in his unique collection.

Mr. Wanamaker was born in this city July 11, 1838, of French and German ancestry, although his forebears had lived in this country since the middle of the eighteenth century. He was the oldest of the seven children of John Nelson Wanamaker. His mother was Elizabeth D. Kochersperger, a descendant of a French Huguenot, who came to America before 1750.

Mr. Wanamaker's father was a descendant of a Palatine family, who left Germany during the religious persecutions there from 1730 to 1740. The merchant's grandfather was John Wanamaker, a farmer of Hunterdon county, N. J., who moved to Dayton, Ohio, in 1815 and subsequently to Kosciusko county, Ind., where he died.

Even when a boy Mr. Wanamaker dreamed of being a merchant and appreciated the value of advertisement. He published Everybody's Journal, which has been described as "a hodge-podge of odd bits and dabs of original matter." After he was in the bookstore for some time, he left that job to enter a Market street clothing house—Barclay Lippincott's. His next position was in Bennett's Tower Hall, also a clothing store.

JOHN WANAMAKER

WHILE the part advertising had in the success of John Wanamaker, dating from a night in April, 1861, when at the close of the first day's business of Wanamaker & Brown, the present merchant leader kept 67 cents for change and invested the balance of the day's receipts—$24—in advertising, there are a great many seldom-mentioned aspects of the part purchased space has placed in building one of the foremost retail institutions in the world. In words similar to these EDITOR & PUBLISHER began in its issue of Sept. 18, 1919, a sketch of the methods that had made the Wanamaker stores in Philadelphia and New York great.

With Wanamaker's, advertising is more than a means to sell goods. It is the courier of a business creed and was representative of but one thing—John Wanamaker, the man, who had something to sell, backed by a selling knowledge gained in a business life of 61 years. He believed in but one kind of advertising medium—the daily newspaper.

Just as his little income in 1861 went almost entirely into the newspapers, so have gone in large part the firm's advertising appropriations ever since. Explaining his policy, Mr. Wanamaker said in 1916, "If I ever have a monument for discovering anything, it will be for finding out that the only advertising of direct and instant benefit to both merchant and customer is the daily newspapers of known circulation. All others are vanity and vexation of spirit. To have learned this fact has greatly helped my enterprises, though often there has been serious discomfort in saying so publicly and in breaking away from posters, leaflets and weeklies."

In more than half a century of business success, John Wanamaker took many vacations—traveled in the out-of-the-way places of the world; forgotten about "good buys," "easy sales," meetings of bank directors and a hundred other things in which his interest was vital. He forgot all those things that he might play, but never—not for one day—did he fail to give his personal attention to Wanamaker advertising.

From that night in 1861, when he sat down at the close of the first day's business and wrote an advertisement that he $24 would purchase until the early eighties, he wrote all Wanamaker advertisements. For many years those advertisements were written after the store closed for the night on the basis of the purchasing power of the day's receipts and it is worthy of notice that each day's receipts were always greater than those of the day before.

Almost until the end, Mr. Wanamaker was accustomed to go around with his pockets bulging with scraps of paper, not unlike a boy who picks up to keep everything that interests him. The scraps of paper, torn at random, among them even the backs of envelopes and pages ripped from note-books, each had a thought jotted down immediately when it came to him, and many of them had to do with advertising.

To him, advertising was the most important of his business activities. He directed all Wanamaker advertising campaigns, criticized and at times changed and rebuilt advertisements written by his force to get the print words that would serve as a tonic to the success of his vast enterprise.

When a statement in a Wanamaker advertisement appeared over the signature of John Wanamaker, that signature was a guarantee that he wrote it, and it was seldom that a Wanamaker advertisement appeared without one of his messages. They were written with painstaking care, sometimes they were rewritten twenty times or more, but it was Wanamaker's, to the last correction.

His other newspaper associations were not direct, although until recent years it was widely believed that he owned the Philadelphia papers mentioned above. The estate of his son, Thomas Wanamaker, was invested in several newspapers which were administered by Rodman Wanamaker, another son, who was also associated with the administration of the James Gordon Bennett estate from which may come eventually a home for New York newspaper in which the late Commodore provided for in his will.

But though John Wanamaker was not a newspaper owner, he made daily use of their columns—daily, except Sunday. It was on September 26, 1874, that John Wanamaker first in a large way made a step that attracted the attention and held until his death, with the prospect that his death will not interrupt it in his business. He then used a half-page advertisement to announce a new policy which was set forth as "One Price Cash Payment—Cash Returned—No Guarantee."

In the early nineties, John Wanamaker attracted the attention of the entire business world and the public in general as the result of a story carried by the Associated Press announcing that he had entered into a contract to buy one page in the Philadelphia Record daily for one year at a cost of $100,000. That was the first full-page contract that had ever been entered into with a daily newspaper, and the largest amount

TABLE PROVES WANT AD RATES LOW ON MANY NEWSPAPERS

Neither Circulation Nor Service Rendered Seems to Be a Factor in Fixing Charges for Classified Space, According to Figures Covering 78 Large and Small American Dailies

CLASSIFIED advertising rates are too low.

Of course, every newspaper publisher thinks that his rate is as high as it can be placed otherwise each one would increase his rate. It is also reasonable to assume that every publisher would gladly increase his rate if he thought by so doing he could increase his revenue without losing any lineage.

It is also safe to state that there is no scientific method of determining the classified rates a paper should maintain.

Without endeavoring to tell any paper what its rates should be; without pretending to offer a formula for determining rates, there is shown herewith a list of 78 newspapers together with their daily and Sunday one-time classified rates, their daily and Sunday circulations, their daily and Sunday rates per thousand circulation, and the date of their last rate changes.

From a study of the list it is certainly easy to prove that many papers could charge a higher rate for want-ads, and the figures show that no scientific formula is used in determining rates.

The following is a summary of the figures in the accompanying chart:

Daily Circulation	No. of Papers	Highest Rates	Lowest Rates	Highest per 1,000	Lowest per 1,000	Average
Up to 25,000	25	.18	.06	.01666	.00272	.00720
25,000 to 50,000	17	.20	.07½	.00588	.00166	.00324
50,000 to 75,000	9	.20	.11	.00363	.00200	.00247
75,000 to 100,000	7	.20	.12	.00220	.00127	.00186
100,000 to 200,000	14	.30	.12	.00233	.00100	.00155
200,000 up	6	.65	.25	.00161	.00096	.00113
Total	78	.65	.06	.01666	.66696	.00205

Of course, there can be no method of determining rates that could be used on all papers. Varying factors such as cost, circulation, competition, custom, etc., enter into the equation.

From the above one might decide that all papers should charge so much per thousand circulation, say, two-tenths of a cent. Or at least a rate per thousand circulation might be advocated for all papers in certain circulation groups, such as shown above.

On the other hand, it is certainly logical to argue that circulation should have nothing to do with rate—that the advertiser does not buy lineage but a service, and that a like service should earn the same rate whether rendered by a paper of 5,000 or 500,000 circulation According to this theory, if people are willing to pay 50 cents per line for want-ads to rent rooms, sell homes, secure labor, sell automobiles, etc., in Chicago, they should be willing to pay the same price for exactly the same service in Kenosha. Eveready razors render the same service in Kenosha and Chicago and in both places sell at the same price. Then why not charge the same price for securing a bookkeeper or other equal services in the two cities.

If the circulation above was used to determine the rates, the papers with large circulation would make a much greater profit and might be accused of profiteering. If service alone was the determining factor, the owners of small papers would be liable to the charge of profiteering.

An agency man, handling a large amount of classified, recently made the statement that 10 years ago he could give from memory the classified rate of any newspaper. According to him, all papers charged one cent per word with a score of exceptions. To memorize the rate cards of all papers then meant to learn the rates of the score of exceptions. Certainly one cent per word was a very general rate a few years ago, and it was probably arrived at by custom rather than reason. Then with rising costs and the general up trend of prices classified rates went up, and the increase was in most cases probably limited by fear—fear of competition and fear of the public.

Both of these fears could be eliminated—fear of competition eliminated by co-operation between papers in the same city; fear of the public by realizing that people as a rule don't care about the rate but about the service rendered, that if they will pay a high rate in some communities for a service, they can be educated to in others.

It is impossible to determine accurately, because few papers seem to have definite records, but it is safe to say that a great many newspapers lose money on their want-ads. In some cases they return a large net profit as they rightly should in every case where they render a service.

To get back to the original statement in this article—classified rates are too low, generally speaking, and the figures herewith show, among others, the following facts that should interest publishers and classified managers:

1. One newspaper getting 18 cents for three-line want-ads and another $1.95 for the same size want-ads which render the identical service in many cases.

2. One newspaper with a classified rate of .01666 per thousand circulation and another only .00096 per thousand.

3. One paper, a well established want-ad medium, getting 22 cents per line for 110,000 circulation and another medium of about the same circulation, same classified strength, and in a city of about the same size, getting 12 cents.

4. One paper with 135,000 circulation getting the same rate as a paper with 34,000 circulation.

5. That of the 78 papers listed, 21 have raised rates this year, 21 last year, 25 have not changed rates since last year, and two have reduced rates.

Of the 78 papers, 14 report that they are considering raising classified rates soon, 34 indicate that they are not contemplating any changes, and 30 do not commit themselves.

Varying views of various classified managers are shown in the following paragraphs:

C. C. Armstrong, classified manager of the Cleveland Press: "I have always been of the opinion that classified advertising should carry lower rates than display. My reasons might be stated in a general way as follows: In the first place the publisher usually does not give classified advertising a square deal. In the second place, a good classified section is such a big asset to a newspaper that want-ads are deserving of a cheaper rate than display. Many publishers look upon classified as sort of an unavoidable nuisance that can't be eliminated, so it is shoved in the background to suit the convenience of anything and everything else that may appear in the paper."

C. B. Nissen, classified manager of the Los Angeles Herald: "I believe in getting as much for classified advertising as is gotten for the average display ad in the same medium. I am of the opinion that each individual want-ad renders a service to the advertiser that in the majority of cases is worth many times more than the amount paid for the ad. I feel that where a want-ad section continues to grow it is due principally to the results delivered to the advertiser and while some classified advertisers make a big kick about increasing rates, if the paper in the past has produced results, very little effect is felt from a rate increase."

M. J. A. McDonald, classified manager of the Oakland Trinube: "Our experience has been that high rates, if they produce any effect at all, produce more business by impressing the public with the value of what we have to sell."

H. K. Seymour, classified manager of the Little Rock Gazette: "Think classified rates generally are too low."

R. E. Lent, general manager of the Passaic News: "Classified rates are generally too low. We believe in a fair cash rate and a high charge rate to those customers who want credit."

J. J. Tierney, classified manager of the Spokane Spokesman-Review: "Some advertisers secure classified space too cheaply. Just a few days ago a local auto dealer ran a two-inch ad in the want-ad section which cost $2.34 and secured results which were satisfactory. Last Sunday he inserted the same ad in a ten-inch display in our motor section, and it cost him $19.60. Although he was satisfied, the results in both cases were about the same. Still he paid $17.26 mo for one ad than for the other.

"I am not losing sight of the fact th in the latter case he was allowed to u display type and ran in the display mot section. Its value from a publicity stan point would be hard to estimate, b nevertheless, I think he received mo dollar for dollar in the classified wa than was the case in display."

A. L. Loud, Springfield, Illinois Sta Journal: "It is my personal opinion th generally speaking, all classified adverti ing rates are too low in price for t value of the service they render. I thi the newspapers through America cou raise them to good advantage. Th probably would not carry as much lin age, but by getting more money f what they did carry, in the end it wou be vastly more profitable. The avera newspaper seems to think more of linea than of dollars and cents, and as th are all obviously in business to ma money, it is extremely difficult for me understand this attitude."

ngfield Agency's "Multum in Parvo" Copy for Retailers Who an't Use Large Space Attracts Readers and Has Developed One Firm Into User of Full-Page Rotogravure

By HAMMOND EDWARD FRANKLIN

IS is a story of what can be done or and with the small-space ad-er.

ny retail and even national firms cannot afford big space advertising se small space campaigning profit-nd thereby step out of the ranks of dvertisers. The advertiser who y, persistently and steadily uses space to advantage all the year l is more valuable from the pub-'s point of view than the one who s an occasional big splurge and is for long periods. Advertising ies in some cases have witnessed ave developed the building of sub-al institutions on small newspaper used regularly.

is is not an argument against the use g space for, if the manufacturer or er has the means, it is often the road icker and larger results, assuming be backed by sound merchandise sold e right way. EDITOR & PUBLISHER wish to point out that the newspaper tising manager or agency executive sniffs at advertising merely because insignificant in size is not nearly so sighted as the one who works hard ild up "the little fellow" at the same he does the big one.

w can an advertiser make the most nall space? How can small space rtisers be developed into larger?

Springfield, Mass., there is an ad-ing agency which has been unusually ssful in handling these questions. It alizes in giving the retail accounts thoroughness of advertising help n the large agency gives to the na-l. Its work stands out as unique in its experience there are ideas n can be absorbed with profit by all ested in making small space count.

orge L. Munn, of this Munn-ingham agency, for ten years was r of the Easthampton (Mass.) News, ekly paper. He found it helped him est merchants in advertising if he e their copy. He did this along in definite lines, they liked it, and, a while, he had so much of this sort ork to do that he transferred his activities to advertising and opened an office at Springfield.

The advertising which has been characteristic of his office might be termed "multum in parvo" copy. It is certainly read and it as certainly sells goods, although spaces are often not over two or three inches deep by a column wide. It appears every day for practically every client and, although it is small, it is by no means "buried." It's business news.

For instance, there is Law, one of Springfield's hardware dealers. Most hardware dealers are backward advertisers, but under this agency's direction, a fresh, chatty piece of copy appears on behalf of Law, the Hardware Man, every day. At the top of each piece of copy awaits the reader the slogan, "Go to Law about it," originated by Mr. Munn.

In one piece of copy, measuring one column wide by three inches deep, appears the heading, "Does your back ache when you're boat riding?" The copy says:

"Here's a folding boat seat which fits on any boat or other seat, hooks under the edge so that it will not tip back, and has a cushioned back rest which opens up into place, giving the body perfect support.

"The seat folds together into a convenient size to carry and weighs very little. You can tuck it under your arm. One of the most practical, useful articles we've seen. For boat, or anywhere else where you have to sit up without a support for your back. $2."

Another "ad" in a single column, 5¼ inches deep, has the headline, "Lawn Mowers that Springfield is proud of." It says:

"Not only because they are made in this city, but because they are of such high grade that they are sold all over the world strictly on their merits. Blair Lawn Mowers have a wonderful record of durability. There are Blair Mowers in the parks and cemeteries of this city which have been in use on every grass cutting day in the year for four to five years and have never needed sharpening, so perfect is their construction and adjustment. We carry ten styles at $8.50 to $22." This advertisement was broken into two paragraphs with two sub-heads.

Then there is Scott's Laundry, with its slogan, "No spots at Scott's," about which, day after day, in small space, chatty, useful and convincing tidbits appear. The T. M. Walker Company, painter's supplies, campaigns likewise. One of its recent advertisements was headed, "You can make new rooms quickly with Black Rock Wallboard." (Note that a complete story is really told in the heading itself even though the reader gets no further.)

The copy said:

"Great firm sheets, 16 feet long, and smaller. You can finish up walls or ceilings quickly, with none of the dampness or litter of lath and plaster. We supply wallboard, doors, windows, paints, varnishes and glass. Divide the rooms that are too big and get a new room or a closet. Ask us about it. Let us mail the booklets; they're worth reading whether you want to build or not."

Oliver & Howland Company, plumbers and plumbing supplies, for years have made continual day-after-day use of the newspapers in space four inches deep by one-column wide, as in the following 'multum in parvo" advertisement, was carried the head: "$10.75 buys a handy shower":

"You'll take lots of comfort in this handy shower bath attachment which fits any bath tub and is no trouble at all to attach. A shower bath is the most healthy and convenient way of bathing. A cool shower in the morning puts you in the right frame of mind for the day's work and at night it takes away that tired feeling. Finely nickeled, $10 postpaid.

"Order one today from Oliver & Howland."

How is the following for good, hard-hitting copy to advertise a bakery? It should be noted that this, too, occupies but four inches, single column:

"WE DIDN'T HAVE
BAKED BEANS
ENOUGH LAST WEEK
BUT WE'RE BAKING MORE
FOR THIS WEEK SATURDAY

"They're genuine 'Boston Baked Beans,' soaked all night, parboiled very carefully, seasoned just right, placed in big heavy earthen pots (not tin pans) with a large piece of the best salt pork, and

BIG DUTCH OVEN

"They're rich, mellow, flavored way through, nourishing and satisfying. They're real 'Boston Baked Beans,' the finest baked beans in the world. Quart.....30c

"Boston Brown Bread—15c. At 11:30 each Saturday."

Another tells about cup cakes which weigh a pound and a half for every dozen, and alluringly creates a taste for the various kinds of frosting. When a special item is featured in copy this way, the effects on bakery sales can be seen immediately, the baker informs EDITOR & PUBLISHER.

Another account which makes small space tell is Johnson's Bookstore, with its miniature ship used for 25 years as a trade-mark. This copy, which runs every day, appears in single column space as small as two inches deep and each is what advertising men consider a gem of copy.

"Our central thought in preparing all copy is story-telling," Mr. Munn stated, when asked to outline some of the knacks

XMAS TOFFEE FOR BRITISH CHILDREN THROUGH NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING

For Every Pound of Mackintosh Confection Purchased Through Retailers, Maker Will Give a "Holly Bag" to Poor Child—Coupon Printed in Newspaper Copy

By HERBERT C. RIDOUT

(London Editor, EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

THE toffee market in Great Britain is the scene of voluminous advertising and the big fellows in the business are showing considerable enterprise in their publicity ideas. The latest of these is perhaps one of the most original ever conceived, and has been launched by the Halifax toffee house of John Mackintosh & Sons, Ltd., as its Christmas campaign.

The advertisements tie up with a clever combination of ideas. One is that toffee will be bought in large quantities for Yuletide, especially where there are children, another that the Yuletide spirit is that 100,000 of these gifts shall be made to needy children.

It is a clever advertising scheme, boldly done, and as the purse-strings are always loose at this time, it may be expected that toffee-buyers realizing that their purchase of Mackintosh's Toffee will mean free candy for poor children at Christmas, will respond heartily to the novel appeal. It is one of the most ingenious schemes of making people buy more than they ordinarily would that we have seen in the English field.

The method of distribution of the gifts through dealers, is practically impossible; but by means of their "Happiness Coupons," Messrs. Mackintosh neatly solve the problem of what papers are good for results and in what respective values.

As the Daily Telegraph in its benediction of the scheme says, "a more beautiful Christmas idea than that conceived by Messrs. Mackintosh could not well be imagined, and it is pretty safe to assume that their wish to ensure a seasonable gift to no fewer than 100,000 poor children will be adequately supported." It is one of the most beautiful selling-schemes ever put forward and Messrs. Mackintosh deserve all the congratulations they are receiving. They will certainly "cash in" on the Yuletide toffee trade.

An advertising copy idea that has set all Great Britain talking about Mackintosh's Toffee.

one of giving, that there are many youngsters in the poorer districts who may have little or no possibility of gifts from St. Nicholas, and further that responsible parties selected for the distribution of gifts should be known to all and sundry.

The advertising scheme takes the form of an offer to purchasers of Mackintosh's Toffee, the manufacturers undertaking that for every pound of their toffee bought and signed for by a candy store, they will provide a bag of toffee for some poor child free of charge, and label it as the gift of the purchaser.

The whole idea is in the Dickensian spirit, the coupon is called the "Happiness Coupon," the presentation bag is decorated with holly designs in colors, and called the "Holly Bag" and it is proposed is well planned, too. Instead of the manufacturers making the distribution, or themselves nominating any body for that purpose, the leading newspapers of the country have been asked to suggest each an organization to undertake the distribution of "Holly Bags" represented by coupons from their columns.

This device achieves several things. It enlists the sympathy and editorial help and endorsement of the scheme. The London Daily Telegraph actively gave forty lines to a recommendation of the "Holly Bag" distribution on its chief news page. It also provides the advertisers with something they, in their method of advertising, have lacked—a means of checking results from the various media used. Keying, where goods are sold

Fitzgerald Company Retains $2,864.83 Judgment Against Mollie King

The Fitzgerald Manufacturing Company, New York, has won its case against Mollie King, motion picture star, in its action against her to enforce its contract for the exclusive use of her photograph and facsimile signature in connection with its advertisement of the Star Electric Vibrator manufactured by the company. The Court of Appeals, sitting in Albany, N. Y., has dismissed her appeal from a judgment of $2,863.83 obtained against her by default as damages for breach of the contract.

The Fitzgerald company paid Miss King $1,000 for the exclusive use of her photograph for a year and it was used in many advertisements illustrating the use of the vibrator. The company alleged she had broken her contract by giving the Wells and Richardson Company of Burlington, Vt., permission to use her photograph on the "Diamond Dye Girl Calendar" for 1920. Also that her publicity agent used her photographs in many publications in connection with her activities.

Miss King recently obtained an order to open her default and permit her to defend the action, which the Appellate Division, third department, reversed and its decision is now affirmed. Her defense was that the use of her photograph in other publications and in connection with other advertising made her more widely known and increased her value as an advertising feature.

Publisher-Retailer Bond Urged

Closer co-operation between newspaper publishers and retail business men was urged at a conference in Portland, December 4, of committees representing the Oregon State Editorial Association and the Oregon State Retail Merchants' Association. The State Editorial Association was represented by S. C. Morton, the St. Helen's Mist; Paul Robinson of Veronia; and Hal E. Hoss, the Oregon City Enterprise, secretary of the association.

Ervin Resigns from New York Call

Charles Ervin, editor-manager of the New York Call, has resigned. The Call of December 13 carried the announcement together with the letter of appreciation sent him by the board of management after it had accepted his resignation. Mr. Ervin, who came to the Call as advertising manager in 1916, became its editor later the same year and in 1918 was elected business manager as well. He established a weekly paper in New Castle, Pa., in 1912 and in 1915 founded the Philadelphia People's Press. Walter W. Liggitt is now managing editor in general charge of the Call.

Starts Publication Division

To handle publicity, editing and the department printing plant, the New York Department of Education has formed a publication division with Lloyd L. Cheney as its chief. Offices will be maintained in the department's building in Albany, N. Y.

CHARGES MAGAZINE SPREADS KU KLUX PROPAGANDA AMONG EDITORS

Owners of "The Country Editor" Deny Truth of Published Accusation of New York World, Though Its Backer Admits Klan Friendship and Approval of Principles

CHARGES of acting as a propagandist for the Ku Klux Klan were published by the New York World this week against a monthly magazine called the Country Editor, recently started at Rockville Center, N. Y., with Teasdale Randolph as editor-in-chief. The World bases its articles on K. K. K. editorial contents and comment and alleged relationship with the Klan by Mr. Randolph; A. Edward Wupperman, who has guaranteed payment of the printing bills for the Country Editor, and Thomas E. Geistweit, a salesman for the Eilert Printing Company, which prints the publication.

The World printed fac similes of an advertisement inserted by Randolph in the Rockville Center Long Island News and Owl on September 7, 1922, for "men of high moral character to become members and organizers of the Klan," and of a letter from A. Edward Wupperman to the publisher of the News and Owl, dated September 6, 1922, saying: "Bills for stationery, printing, typesetting, etc., incurred by Dr. Randolph in behalf of the first issue of the Country Editor will be paid by us within 10 days after receipt of same at this office." The letter was written on the office stationery of the J. W. Wupperman Angostura Bitters Agency, Inc., 14 East 46th street, New York City, and signed by A. E. Wupperman as vice-president and secretary.

Mr. Wupperman, while admitting the authenticity of the letter, denies it pertained in any way to payment for the Klan ad, which the publishers of the News and Owl say was inserted by Randolph without their knowledge, while he was employed as a compositor on their newspaper. Mr. Wupperman denied ever having heard of the ad until it was thus called to his attention.

The Country Editor made its appearance in November as a monthly, styling itself: "A Forum of Constructive Expression to Promote American Ideals and Institutions." It featured a special article entitled "The Ku Klux Klan and the Press—Friends or Foes?" by Rev. William J. Mahoney, Imperial Klokard of the Klan, a paragraph of which read: "Viewed simply from the angle of publicity given, the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan owe a debt of gratitude to the editors of America, while viewed from the standpoint of just treatment, the editors of America owe the Klan a decided apology." Under the heading of the article is a cut of a band of robed Klansmen mounted on extended steeds and bearing an American flag and a fiery cross. The caption is, "To the Rescue of American Institutions." Under the cut is typed: "The editors of this magazine maintain a neutral attitude on the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, but since the matter is one of widespread interest it has decided to publish a series of articles setting forth various phases of the activities of the Klan in different parts of the country."

After the close of the article is the following editorial comment: "We are commencing to admire the Klan for the enemies it has made. Watch for our next issue."

In the December number, or "second achievement," as it is styled, is another feature article on the Klan entitled "Does America Need the Ku Klux Klan?" by Fred L. Savage, Imperial Night Hawk and Chief of Staff to the Imperial Wizard. He says the country does, and that the number of Klansmen is fast approaching the million mark. With the article is a cut depicting sturdy workmen and a band of Klansmen 'riding' them away from the Capitol in Washington. The American flag has been planted on the side of the Klansmen and the workmen are depicted carrying an I. W. W. banner.

In the same number are articles on "What Happened in Oregon," where it was stated the people voted with the Klan, and one on the Knights of Columbus, both signed "by the Editor."

The World also says, it learned, that the printing of the Country Editor was arranged with the Eilert Printing Company, No. 318 West 39th street, New York, by Thomas E. Geistweit, a salesman, and that Klan circulars, sent to girls' schools extolling the organization and asking for gentlemen members, called for response to Times Square Post Office, Box No. 217, which was rented by Geistweit, who lives at Montclair, N. J.

Besides Messrs. Randolph's and Wupperman's connections with the Country Editor, Walter Kutzleb, 81 Fulton street, New York City, is president of the Country Editor Publishing Company, but he is not connected in any way in Klan activities, as far as can be learned. Mr. Kutzleb has been New York agent for the Russo-Chinese Bank; a member of the banking firm of H. B. Hollins & Co., which failed in 1913; president of the Organic Salt & Acid Company and connected with other business enterprises. The Country Editor carries the address of Mr. Kutzleb as its New York office, but calls there for Mr. Randolph, the editor, were referred to the office of the J. W. Wupperman Angostura Bitters Agency, Inc., 14 East 46th street, where his editorial office is actually located, he said, instead of at Rockville Center, its published address.

Messrs. Kutzleb, Randolph and Wupperman all emphatically denied to EDITOR & PUBLISHER that they are members of the Klan or that the Country Editor is an organ of the Klan or has any connection whatever with that or any other secret organization. They said the articles on the Klan, "like the article on the Knights of Columbus, is published for the purpose of throwing light on a subject that is at present occupying public attention."

"I am president of the Country Editor Publishing Company," said Mr. Kutzleb, "and I would not permit its policies to be governed by religious, class or race prejudices."

In a statement to EDITOR & PUBLISHER, Mr. Wupperman said: "I guaranteed Dr. Randolph's printing bill because I believed in him and his enterprise. Talks on the Klan have been given at my apartment, but I am not a member of the Klan and have no intention of becoming one. I have no official connection with the Country Editor."

At the same time, Mr. Wupperman gave the New York World a signed statement admitting a friendly interest in the Klan, saying "that he obtained the Klan articles, appearing in the Country Editor, for Mr. Kutzle and offered to get genuine Klan articles' for any reputable publishers at very reasonable rates." He starts off by saying he is not a member of the Klan and does not intend to become a member, and later in the same statement says: "Some day I may try to become a member if they will have me."

The formal statement of Mr. Wupperman follows:

"I am not a member of the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, have never been a member and do not intend to become a member. I have a friend who is a Klansman, a Kleagle I think he calls himself, and I arranged with him to give a talk on the Klan last summer at my apartment, 57 West 75th street, New York. It was so entertaining and instructive that I repeated it on several occasions. Many of my friends were present, including a judge, several physicians and lawyers, two or three clergymen and a quite prominent banker and financier. My friend also invited some people. I tried to arrange a similar meeting at my mother's apartment in 81st street, but it was a stormy night and only three persons attended.

"The discourse was very interesting. The speaker disclaimed any purpose to sow discord among people of different religions or races, and altogether it seemed to me that it might be a very useful organization. My friend told me that nobody ever became a member of the Klan as a result of these meetings, but I am sure everybody enjoyed the talk and especially the costume, which is very impressive and lends an air of mystery to the occasion.

"You would be surprised if I mentioned the names of two or three very prominent persons who attended. I think if more people would hold these meeting there would be less violent criticism of the Klan. A good deal of this Ku Klux talk is very childish. I should be glad to arrange for meetings at private homes if any one is interested. It should become quite a fad this winter among fashionable people.

"Many of my close friends are Roman Catholics and Jews, and I can assure them that there is nothing said at any of these meetings that reflected on any race or creed. In a there were Roman Catholics and Jews p and there was considerable discussion and forth. Some of my first cousin Roman Catholics and I am on most affect terms with them.

"The main topic of these talks was erly love and I don't see why any Je Roman Catholic should not subscribe to principles. Perhaps there will be Klans on that will admit even colored people. should not every good citizen be at he Klansman, if all that is meant is bro love? Some day I may try to beco member if they will have me.

"There is a magazine called The C Editor, published by a banker, Walter K at 81 Fulton street, New York. This cation carries an article on the Klan current issue, written by the Chief of S the Imperial Wizard. Everybody inte in the Klan should read this article. instrumental in getting it for Mr. Kutzle it gives a splendid idea of the Klan. Kutzleb is of foreign birth, so no on accuse him of being a Klansman. Mor he carries an article on the Knights of C bus in the same issue. If a lot of peopl are shouting against the Klan would rea Country Editor, they would get a shock.

"I think magazines should publish articles like this. It is good busines helps sell the paper. I can get genuine articles for any reputable publishers at reasonable rates."

Teasdale Randolph, editor-in-chi the Country Editor, told EDITOR & LISHER that he had worked in pract all parts of the United States, chie a free-lance and that at one time h owned a weekly society paper pub in the North Side of Chicago. he said, he sold to Mr. Oliver, the i tor of the Oliver typewriter, for his Mr. Oliver junior later disposed c paper. Last spring Dr. Randolph to Rockville Center, N. Y., and w as a compositor for the Acorn lishing Company. He said:

The News Is Detroit's Medium

NOT so long ago COPY was the advertiser's chief consideration. Given a strong piece of copy he, like Archimedes and his lever, set out to move the world, but the old Greek philosopher demanded in addition to his lever a strong prop. Today advertisers are realizing that without the right medium, or prop, their copy is all for naught.

The question of medium is becoming even more important than copy. In Detroit it is, however, the least puzzling problem. The Detroit medium is The News, with more than 280,000 week day circulation and over 240,000 Sunday circulation that blankets the city, practically duplicating all competing circulation and offering a large exclusive circulation reached by no other paper.

Considering the phenomenal prosperity and unusual employment conditions of Detroit and the fact that a copy of The News reaches every 4.9 unit of population, it offers advertisers the most unusual opportunity of any newspaper in the United States.

"OHIO FIRST"

Ohio is one of the greatest producing states in the Union and is also one of the leading territories in buying.

Many national advertisers have made "try out" campaigns in the State of Ohio, and have demonstrated that it was a field for sure and quick results.

Ohio buyers are keen in their perception of values, and ready and willing to buy at a moment's notice.

National advertisers often wonder at the unusual response to their campaigns in Ohio first newspapers—the list printed below.

Ohio merchants never wonder at it. They know that well-directed sales campaigns backed by careful advertising in this list of publications will always get results.

Because OHIO people are FIRST to buy and last to turn your product down if it has merit.

4. The uniformity of nomenclature for the classification of merchandise.

5. Uniform parcels post procedure and consideration of the Pan American Parcel Post Convention.

6. Advisability of adopting conventions in order to make effective Resolution XVII, voted by the Second Pan American Financial Congress, which assembled at Washington in January, 1920. The resolution referred to above is the following: RESOLVED, That, it being in the interest of all nations that there should be the widest possible distribution of raw materials, the importation of such materials into any country should not be prevented by prohibitive duties.

VII. Measures for the simplificatiton of passports and adoption of standard form.

VIII. Co-operation in the study of agricultural problems. Uniformity of agricultural statistics. Co-operation in the elimination of diseases of cattle. Organized effort for interchange of useful plants and seeds.

IX. Consideration of measures tending towards closer association of the Republics of the American Continent with a view of promoting common interests.

X. Consideration of the best means to give wider application to the principle of the judicial or arbitral settlement of disputes between the Republics of the American Continent.

XI. Consideration of the best means to promote the arbitration of commercial disputes between nationals of different countries.

XII. Consideration of the reduction and limitation of military and naval expenditures on some just and practicable basis.

XIII. Consideration of standardizing of university curricula and mutual recognition of the validity of professional degrees among the American Republics.

XIV. Consideration of the rights of aliens resident within the jurisdiction of any of the American Republics.

XV. Consideration of the status of children of foreigners born within the jurisdiction of any of the American Republics.

XVI. Consideration of the questions arising out of an encroachment by a non-American power on the rights of an American nation.

XVII. The formulation of a plan by which, with the approval of the scholars and investigators in the several countries, approximately uniform means may be used by the governments of the Americas for protection of those archeological and other records needed in construction of an adequate American history.

XVIII. Consideration of measures adapted to secure the progressive diminution in the consumption of alcoholic beverages.

XIX. Future conferences.

KIRKSVILLE DAILIES MERGED

Swain, Express Publisher, Buys News—Consolidation January 1

Contracts have just been signed by E. E. Swain, publisher of the Kirksville Daily Express, and C. C. Howard, publisher of the Kirksville (Mo.) Daily News, under which Mr. Swain purchases the News, taking possession January 1. Mr. Howard is planning to re-enter the newspaper business in California. Negotiations have been under way for several weeks for this purchase and consolidation, the movement having the support of Kirksville advertisers. Kirksville business and professional men have signed an agreement not to support any other daily newspaper in Kirksville.

The consolidated paper probably will be known as the Kirksville Daily Express & News. The two plants will be moved to the building now occupied by the Express, but much of the News equipment will be sold.

Mr. Swain was a reporter on the Rochester (N. Y.) Herald and St. Louis Globe-Democrat, a copy-reader on the Post-Dispatch and night editor of the St. Louis bureau of the Associated Press. He has been publisher of the Express for 11 years. Mr. Howard had published newspapers in the cities of Kirksville, Columbia and Macon prior to returning to Kirksville as owner of the News six years ago.

What Cincinnati merchants do

BECAUSE Cincinnati is located in the center of a thickly populated district, quickly served by numerous traction, railway and street car lines, it is an "afternoon circulation" city.

During the year 1921 the leading department stores of Cincinnati used 5,514,237 lines of display advertising in the two afternoon papers. 4,434,136 lines of this space were used in the TIMES-STAR!

This is dominating four to one, indicating unquestioned leadership for the TIMES-STAR. This must prove that the TIMES-STAR reaches the best people in Cincinnati—and reaches them regularly, day after day through the year.

Such a dominating medium makes definite and tangible results a certainty for the advertiser. Both local and national advertisers have preferred the TIMES-STAR for the past fifteen years.

"THE PRESS CONGRESS OF THE WORLD IN HAWAII"

Edited by Dean Williams, School of Journalism, University of Missouri, President of the Congress. 605 pages (about 300,000 words). Cloth binding, with title gold stamped. Price $5 Post Free.

NOW ON DISTRIBUTION
Throughout the World

THIS volume is a full and complete record of the historic proceedings of the Press Congress of the World, held in Hawaii in October, 1921. At this Congress, representatives of the Press from all quarters of the globe attended and discussed frankly their own problems and questions common to all newspaper interests. This book reports all the discussions, but in many other ways also makes such an appeal by reason of its intimate approach to the production of newspapers that it is emphatically a work to be owned, for reference, and prized by every newspaper man.

As only a limited edition is available, orders should be placed at once.

"The Press Congress of the World in Hawaii" is edited by Dean Walter Williams, Director of the School of Journalism of the University of Missouri, who is President of the Congress, and is produced under the direction of the Governing Committee of the Congress.

It is beautifully printed and bound—an example of the highest developments in typography, print, and binding.

It is profusely illustrated with special photographs of President Harding (Hon. President of the Press Congress), Congress Officers, and Delegates, and scenes in the Hawaiian Islands taken during the Congress.

The literary contents include a Foreword by the President of the United States, and a special message to the Congress dealing with the interest and obligation of the press of the world in international affairs—a foreword not heretofore published. This contribution by President Harding is one that will probably be quoted throughout the world for its importance and significance.

The proceedings of the Congress are given in full, as stenographically reported, and herein are treated questions of immediate and permanent value to all interested in journalism.

Notable addresses and papers, with messages from journalists in many countries, describe press conditions in every quarter of the globe. This feature of the volume will be found of high value to every student of journalism, and to every student of world affairs, as well as to men and women engaged in the profession of journalism.

The account of the visit of the Press Congress delegates and their Island trip is written by Howard D. Case, of Honolulu, and is a fascinating chapter of Hawaiian scenes and conditions, as interesting to those who know Hawaii only by repute as to those who have seen its beauties for themselves.

The book contains 605 pages (size 9 by 6 in.) of 300,000 words—in all a unique record of a unique Congress, a book that should find an honored place in the library of every newspaperman and woman in the country. It is part of the history of journalism.

Price $5.00, post free. Orders should be sent at once.

LATIN AMERICAN ADVERTISING TRAPS FIRMS IGNORANT OF COUNTRIES

Trade Awaits Americans Who Study Peculiar Tastes of Each Nation, Says Aughinbaugh's New Book—Black Sheep's Mail Order Number Holds Many Laughs

By JAMES MELVIN LEE

Director, Department of Journalism, New York University

ATTENTION has been repeatedly called in this department to the fact that "it is the taste of the fish and not that of the angler that determines the bait." This fact is stressed in "Advertising for Trade in Latin-America" by William E. Aughinbaugh—(Century Company). To reach the trade successfully in South America, the advertiser simply must know the peculiar taste of the inhabitants of the various countries. These are well set forth by Mr. Aughinbaugh, who is the foreign export editor of The New York Commercial. The book must be judged by the standards which obtain in Latin-America rather than by the standards commonly accepted for the sister continent in the North. The appendix contains possibly the best directory of Latin-American publications ever printed. This one feature, alone, is worth the price of the book.

EVERY advertising man who wants a good hearty laugh should "round up" a copy of the Black Sheep. Get the special mail order number. All that is necessary is to fill out a coupon and send it to the Ethridge Company, 203 South Dearborn street, Chicago—or if you live along the Atlantic coast, to the same company at 25 East 26th street, New York City. In all the years I edited Judge, I never put out an issue which was half so clever—neither did my competitors.

I have always maintained that no double page spread of The National Cash Register in the Saturday Evening Post ever set forth so well the purpose of the cash register as:

Bill: "Hello, John, making any money these days?"

John: "No! The boss has put in a National Cash Register."

In a similar way the Black Sheep drives home many an advertising truth even if it does "say it with a smile."

PERIPATETIC pamphlets about journalism are often well worth while preserving. A recent booklet of that type is "A Study of the New York Times." It gives "all the facts that are necessary" about the Times as an advertising medium. It contains numerous maps and graphs to illustrate the text. It says a word or two about the advantages of morning newspapers in general, and about the New York Times in particular. For the benefit of advertisers it prints an "advertising expergatorius." To satisfy a legitimate curiosity about the success of the Times, it lists somewhat categorically the important elements which have contributed to the remarkable growth and development of that newspaper. With pardonable pride it concludes with a few bouquets presented by other newspapers. Because of the success achieved by the Times since Adolph S. Ochs became its publisher, it is well worth while to study this booklet, which describes in detail those features which have given the New York Times a prominent position not only in the journalism of New York City, but in the journalism of the world. Though privately printed, reasonable requests for copies will doubtless be met upon application to Louis Wiley, business manager of the Times, New York City.

MANY country editors will find it worth while to drop a postal to the Country Review, Riverhead, N. Y., and request a copy of the Printogram. It is a good thing to know the ways and means used by fellow publishers in getting advertising and job press work. The Review is a very successful weekly published at the county seat. It is edited by Harry Lee, a friend but not a relative of the writer.

WHETHER a newspaper should charge for its religious notices and church advertisements is a question each newspaper must answer for itself. Whatever the answer is, it is worth while to look over the proofs of suggested advertisements which Herbert H. Smith, 518 Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia, will send to any newspaper publisher.

A HANDY booklet on church publicity has been written by Ralph Welles Keeler, 740 Rush street, Chicago. Though this pamphlet was prepared especially for Methodist churches, it contains suggestions equally as useful for other denominations. The title is "Publicity for City Methodism."

EDGAR A. GUEST is the newspaper poet of the Detroit Free Press. Through a syndicate and through the magazines and through the courtesy of the exchange editor, he has a wide audience. In the newspaper fraternity he is especially popular. An excellent motto for newspapers is the title given his latest book, "All That Matters" (Reilly & Lee).

For once at least, the blurb on the jacket tells the truth when it says that "no other book of contemporaneous verse is embellished with so distinguished an array of artistic talent." The sentiment expressed in the verse, itself, is so high and lofty that it is worth illustrations of the foremost American artists.

More truth than poetry—and this is no reflection on the poetry either—may be found in the poem entitled "The Newspaper Man." Because of its subject matter it is worth quoting in full:

"Bit of a priest and a bit of sailor,
Bit of a doctor and bit of a tailor,
Bit of a lawyer, and bit of detective,
Bit of a judge, for his work is corrective;
Cheering the living and soothing the dying,
Risking all things, even dare-devil flying;
True to his paper and true to his clan—
Just look him over, the newspaper man.

"Sleep! There are times that he'll do with a little,
Work till his nerves and his temper are brittle;
Fire cannot daunt him, nor long hours disturb him,
Gold cannot buy him and threats cannot curb him;
Highbrow or lowbrow, your own speech he'll hand you,
Talk as you will to him, he'll understand you;
He'll go wherever another man can—
That is the way of the newspaper man.

"Surgeon, if urgent the need be, you'll find him,
Ready to help, nor will dizziness blind him;
He'll give the ether and never once falter,
Say the last rites like a priest at the altar;
Gentle and kind with the weak and the weary,
Which is proved now and then when his keen eye grows teary;
Facing all things in life's curious plan—
That is the way of the newspaper man.

"One night a week may he rest from his labor,
One night at home to be father and neighbor;
Just a few hours for his own bit of leisure,
All the rest's gazing at other men's pleasure,
All the rest's toiling, and yet he rejoices,
All the world is, and that men do, he voices—
Who knows a calling more glorious than
The day-by-day work of the newspaper man?'

After reading all of the poems in th volume, I may say that most of the are worthy of perusal by the newspap man.

ASTORIA DAILIES BURNED OUT

Finnish Paper Prints Page in English While Conflagration Rages

(By Telegraph to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

PORTLAND, Ore., Dec. 11.—The Morning Astorian and Astoria Budget were completely destroyed in a $12,000,000 fire which swept 24 business blocks in Astoria, Ore., the morning of December 8. The Astorian had occupied its new building only four months, and is now being published at Y. M. C. A. The Budget, established in new quarters but two months, is now being published in Seaside. A rough estimate of loss of both papers is about $75,000.

The fire started in a restaurant centrally located and is believed to have been of incendiary origin, the work of radicals. Astoria, founded in 1811 by John Jacob Astor, is now facing the greatest crisis in its history. The conflagration swept over the city at such a terrific speed that nothing aside from book and accounts were saved by merchants. Twenty-five hundred of the 20,000 population are homeless. Food and supplies now being rushed by Portland. Two are dead and many injured.

The Commercial Printing Company, the Franklin Press, and the Finnish Lutheran Book Concern, a publishing house, are all total losses, the only printing concern saved being the Pacific Development Society, which publishes Tovertar. This paper, printed in Finnish, got out extra page in English the day of the fire. The city limits are being policed and no one is allowed in or out of the city, unless for good reason. No one at all is allowed in fire areas. Merchants can only stand on hill and look down upon ruined property.

LACK OF WOOD HAMPERS MILLS

Low Water and Car Shortage Effects Watertown District

Shortage of wood pulp arising from the long drouth and lack of cars with which to import it from Canada is proving a serious factor for newsprint mills of northern New York. Water in the Black and Racquette rivers, on which are located most of the newsprint mills of this section, has been so low that the mills have been unable to run their grinders consistently.

The mills of the Hanna Paper Corporation on the Racquette River have been particularly affected, and have found it necessary to close down to three days a week. The St. Regis Paper Company's mills on the Black River have a depleted supply of pulp and have been unable to operate grinders at anywhere near the amount necessary to keep the paper machines in steady operation.

To avoid the difficulty arising every year through low water, the St. Regis Company plans to install next spring thirteen electric grinders, using hydro-electric power to operate.

CHURCH AD SPACE SOLD TO MERCHANTS WHEN PASTOR PROVED DIFFICULT

Business Men Who Are Church Members Do Not Need Long Arguments on Value of Advertising to Church, While Pastors Are Sometimes Unconvinced

By HERBERT H. SMITH

Chairman Copy Committee, Church Advertising Department, A. A. C. W.

LETTERS recently received by the Presbyterian department of publicity from advertising managers of nearly 100 daily papers show that the greatest difficulty papers have in soliciting display advertising of churches is that the churches are not persuaded they should use paid advertising.

Churches in many cases do not have a publicity item in their budget, although information from Presbyterian churches shows that 800 of the 9,600 congregations of that denomination do have such an appropriation. A large part of such money in most churches goes for the weekly calendar or order of worship.

In many cases solicitors must not only persuade the pastor but members of the official board as well. Individuals who in their businesses use advertising space liberally are often reluctant to use the same psychological laws to persuade people to come to church.

In a few cases the stumbling block to more progressive church advertising is the newspaper itself. One advertising manager said that he did not care to push church advertising, although the paper accepted what was brought in.

Another manager thought that advertising commercialized the church, and he did not approve of this method of promotion. Nearly all denominations have, however, approved this method of urging people to church, and Bible students point out in Holy Writ the approval of methods of reaching people other than by word of mouth.

Many advertising managers indicated they would be interested in methods of selling church advertising, hence this article.

As the greatest difficulty in selling church advertising arises from the necessity of visiting many individuals in closing a contract, therefore if we can sell large space by seeing a few people we have accomplished two ends. Perhaps a tendency to this line of least resistance has stimulated the development of pages of church advertising of which that illustrated, from the Wichita Beacon, is fairly typical.

F. O. Schroeder, advertising manager of the Beacon, nearly a year ago conceived the idea of a full page of church material in the Saturday issue. He decided that the paper would bear half the expense of the page and print there the usual announcements of the topics of sermons. To 22 merchants and other concerns of Wichita he then sold on a six months' contract space which would carry a general message of church interest. He used a large heading across the page and obtained a weekly article from the secretary of the Wichita Church Federation as the feature of the page.

Contracts have recently been renewed for another six months. The price per week to each of the merchants is very little. They are credited with payment for the page in good-sized space. One of the members of the advertising department of the Beacon says concerning the publishing of these names:

"Incidentally, advertising of this kind does a lot more good than some people realize. The average church member is a very substantial citizen. He usually has more money to buy things with than the man who is not a church member. Good will is cultivated among the most substantial element of the city, and I believe it produces returns, although they are not directly traceable to this form of advertising."

The Des Moines Capital has recently started a church page very similar to that of the Beacon's, although the general matter on the Capital's page is written in turn by local pastors. The Kansas City Kansan, which has one of the best pages of church news of any paper in the country, has a page of advertising on Saturday, but without a general message of any sort. This paper gives two inches or more to each church with the name of the church in display text type and the pastor's name and hours of services in body type.

The Wichita Eagle has a page similar to that of the Beacon with general matter in the center of the page.

The Tulsa Tribune, Topeka Capital, Madison (Wis.) Capital Times, and probably other papers use a half-tone of each of the several churches in toith general matter in the center of the age designed to attract people to hurch. The Tulsa Tribune material is repared by Richard Lloyd Jones, editor, nd takes the form of a sermonette. These ermonettes and the idea of using the uts of local churches has been sold by Ir. Jones, or representatives of his aper, to other dailies, principally in the outh.

This church page was sold on a contract basis to regular advertisers in the Wichita Beacon. It is easy to sell, benefits the churches and is of indirect value to the merchants who pay the bill.

In the case of the foregoing eight apers, and others which were not ob-ained in time for this survey, the space sold to merchants, each of whom pays certain amount, on a six months' or a ear's contract. The feature matter on ie page is aimed at the "unsold mar-et" of the churches, those who go to no hurch, with the name, location and hours f service of the individual churches to ttract them to a particular church.

In order to sell this page for the hurches from 20 to 25 firms contribute. hey are accustomed to purchase adver-sing and the solicitation need not be ng. If the individual churches were licited in the same way usually a good eal more work would be required.

The Kansas City Star is typical of a rge number of papers which sell a age, or most of a page, to individual hurches, each congregation buying as uch space as it likes. The Star do-ates space for a general message in large pe. It has used several of the series f ads isued by the Church Advertising epartment of the A. A. C. W., but is ow running short talks by ministers of ie city, a different writer each week.

The Spokane Chronicle introduces an-her innovation in the handling of hurch ads. It has a space fifteen inches five columns decorated with a border, drawing of a church and a decorative ead "Go to Church Sunday" followed a general talk on the value of hurches to a community, etc., the talk ing changed each week. Individual ads churches are run in a well laid-out anner, each ad being loaded with ough additional expense to pay its pro ta share of the border and heading. his space is sold to each church on a arly contract.

The method used by the Kansas City ar and Spokane Chronicle is used by a rge number of papers, and has the merit educating the churches in the pur-ase of advertising space. When the erchants of the city buy space, and it presented to the churches the latter are t being trained to pay for special bene-s they expect, although that method es make for easiest present sales.

Here and there over the country, but ually for short periods of time, groups churches or church federations unite the purchase of space in which the ace of the church in civilization and the essity of church attendance is set rth, followed by the names and ad-esses of the participating churches.

Thirteen Presbyterian churches of At-nta used a series of illustrated ads, e inches on two columns, in this way, d other groups have done the same ing.

The three pages of illustrated church ads sued by the Western Newspaper Union ve been used in hundreds of country eeklies and other papers to stimulate urch-going and a higher plane of living.

Several papers in the central west have scovered that the use of copy designed get people to go to some church has sulted in stimulating the use of display ace by individual churches. One paper hich had considerable difficulty in per-ading churches to do any advertising s seen paid space grow largely, and e church has developed into the user of out 8 inches every Saturday.

In some towns like Columbia, S. C., d Binghamton, N. Y., such general in-tations to church services have been t in full page space, paid for by a group merchants or by churches.

The Church Advertising Department of e Associated Advertising Clubs of the orld has been stimulating the use of id newspaper space for papers in ery way possible. It discovered that e of the greatest difficulties in the way selling adequate space was copy, and erefore has concerned itself during the st year with the collection and prepa-tion of acceptable copy which can be used either by one church or a group of churches to stimulate attendance at all churches. This copy is offered not because it is the only material that may be obtained for such purposes, but it is believed to be the best that has been offered to newspapers generally. The Church Advertising Department is much less interested in getting this copy printed than it is in having some copy of generous size used. It is eager to serve churches and the newspapers in every way possible to stimulate the use of display space to persuade people to go to church and to practice Christianity.

Papers which have used brief sermonettes by local ministers as a feature on the church page have observed that very often this material is written more from the standpoint of the ministerial study than from that of the man on the street who goes nowhere to church—the individual whom the churches want to get inside their doors.

A small charge has been made by the Church Advertising Department for the use of its copy, in order to pay the cost of printing proofs and circularizing.

More interest is being paid by advertising managers to the possibilities of church advertising than ever before. Such co-operation with the church offers a fine opportunity for helpfulness for the town, and at the same time provides sufficient revenue to pay the expense of operation.

SIR ROBERT BAIRD ENDS TOUR

Finds Ad Men Eager for London 1924 Convention

Sir Robert Baird, proprietor of the Belfast Telegraph, who has been on an eight thousand miles tour of the United States, is in New York for a few days, before sailing on the Majestic December 23 for London, where he will spend Christmas with relatives, before returning to Belfast.

Sir Robert came to the United States to convey an invitation from the advertising clubs of Ulster to the advertising clubs of this country to visit Ireland, during the proposed convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World in London in 1924.

He visited Philadelphia, Washington, Richmond, Atlanta, New Orleans, San Antonio, El Paso, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Salt Lake City, Chicago, Toronto and other cities, and says that with one accord, he found advertising men eager to have this convention held in London in 1924.

"In fact, the only difficulty seems to be that too many people will want to attend," said Sir Robert with a twinkle in his eye.

Naturally he was more interested in newspapers than in anything else and in every city on his tour he visited the plant of the largest newspaper. According to Sir Robert, among the many things which he learned while on this trip were two new words in newspaper vernacular, bull-dog edition and boiler plate.

During his few days' visit in New York, en route home, Sir Robert was entertained a number of times, including a Masonic luncheon on December 13.

JOINT I. T. U.—MAILERS' ACTION APPROVED

Typographical Union Votes for Contracts Covering Printers and Mailers, With Joint Expiry Date and Sympathetic Strikes

Referendum vote by the International Typographical Union resulted in the adoption of three propositions which were approved by the recent Atlantic City convention. They first changed the compensation of the first vice-president from a per diem basis and expense allowance to a salary of $4,000 a year and provided that he shall reside permanently in Indianapolis and give all his time to the union. The second provides for combination contracts with printers and mailers and sympathetic strikes in the event of trouble with either union, and the third surrendered the I. T. U. jurisdiction over the newspaper writers union so that the latter may be organized by the American Federation of Labor.

The second proposition, which is of fundamental importance to publishers in practically all cities where daily newspapers are issued, is as follows:

Amend Section 2, article i, constitution, to read as follows:

"Section 2. A charter may be issued to eight or more printers and to five or more of the allied crafts or printing trades in any city or town. Only one English-speaking subordinate union in any distinctive craft shall be chartered in the same place; but a charter may be granted to printers or mailers of, and working in, a foreign tongue, and such printers or mailers may join an English-speaking union in any place where a union in their mother tongue does not exist. Where printers' and mailers' unions chartered by this union have jurisdiction in different departments in the same establisment, contracts of employment shall be negotiated jointly and with identical expiration dates, and these contracts shall contain a clause that an authorized strike or a lockout in any department shall automatically terminate contracts covering other departments or unions.

In the past the I. T. U. has not permitted differences between publishers and mailers or demands for recognition of mailers' unions to interfere with the operation of contracts made with printers, or allowed any claim of the mailers to interfere with cordial contract relations between publishers and printers.

The new propositions voted on and all others that the Atlantic City convention adopted which were not submitted to referendum, become effective January 1, 1923. They do not apply during the life of contracts negotiated prior to that date.

Union sentiment was strongly divided on the second proposition, it is shown by the vote, which was 21,530 for, and 16,699 against. On the other two propositions, the vote was about 28,000 favorable and 9,000 opposed.

WAGE CUT IN EVERETT

Long-Standing Dispute With I. T. U. Ended With New Newspaper Pact

The long-standing dispute between newspaper publishers and typographical union in Everett, Wash., was settled a few days ago when the union accepted a reduction in scale of $1.50 per week, day and night. This makes the scale $48 for night work and $45 for day work. The contract is effective from December 1, 1922, to June 30, 1924. During the negotiation of the previous two contracts the union had forced the publishers to pay a wage scale higher than that prevailing in most cities of 100,000 population and over and had refused to heed the orders of the International Arbitration Board that the dispute be arbitrated under the regular procedure. While the controversy was in full swing, James B. Best, publisher of the Everett Herald, broke down in health, chiefly, it was stated, because of the financial and other worries that the attitude of the union caused him.

The union's attitude in this case has been held responsible for much of the open shop sentiment that has appeared in the Northwest during the past year and the dispute has received wide publicity throughout the country, through the publishers of that section.

Renew Wages in Perth Amboy

Perth Amboy (N. J.) newspapers have renewed from October 1, 1922, to October 1, 1923, their wage contract with the typographical union. The scale is $48 for night work and $45 for day work, with apprentices receiving one-half to two-thirds of the scale. The 48-hour week is agreed upon.

KNIGHT SUES PROVIDENCE NEWS

Seeks $800,000 in Libel Action Against Paper and Officers

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Dec. 12.—Motions by the defense to strike out certain allegations made by the plaintiffs in the actions for civil libel brought by B. B. & R. Knight, Inc., and three of the corporation's officers, against the Hope Publishing Company, publishers of the Providence News, were denied in the Federal Court here today.

There was also denied a motion filed by the defense that the plaintiffs be required to specify what parts of the article appearing in the Providence News of March 18 are relied upon by the plaintiffs as libelous. A third motion to require the plaintiffs to elect whether they will file further counts also were denied. In passing on this point Judge Brown informed counsel for the News that further counts cannot be filed without motion. The attorney for the defense was given until Tuesday to plead to the libels or demur.

B. B. & R. Knight, Inc., is suing the Hope Publishing Company for $500,000 damages. The three officers are suing for $100,000 each. The actions grow out of an article published in the Providence News last March, concerning a suit for damages brought by E. J. McCaffrey against B. B. & R. Knight, Inc., in which Mr. McCaffrey alleged breach of contract in the handling of soap sizing.

OIL CO. CHARGED WITH FALSE ADS

Federal Trade Commission Issues Complaint Against Dispatch Company

The Federal Trade Commission has issued a formal complaint against the Dispatch Petroleum Company, Porter Oakes and James T. Chiles, of Wichita Falls, Tex., charging misrepresentation in the advertising and sale of oil stock. The company, according to the complaint, is a Texas joint stock association.

It is charged in the complaint that respondent Messrs. Oakes and Chiles conducted and managed the business and affairs of the company to their individual financial interests as against interests of the purchasers of the stock, and that in the advertisement and sale of the stock used advertising matter which contained numerous alleged misleading and deceptive statements and representations.

LAST ARGUMENTS IN BEECKMAN SUITS MADE

All But First Action Against Providence News Await Decision of Judge Gorham—Lawyer Claims Privileged Communication

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Dec. 8.—The final arguments on the complaints of criminal libel brought by ex-Governor Beeckman against John A. Hennessy, editor of the Providence News, and Henry D. Hamilton, its secretary and treasurer, were made in the Sixth District Court today.

Attorney Claude R. Branch, appearing for Mr. Beeckman, characterized the respondents as belonging to the class of men "afraid to acknowledge error, too cowardly to come out and tell the facts, and who would try to hide behind technicalities." William W. Moss, arguing for the respondents, declared the article published in the News charging Beeckman with attempt to bribe as coming under the head of "privileged communications." In making its charges, the News, he said, was but availing itself of its legal privilege to criticise a man who had submitted himself to the people as a candidate for office.

With the conclusion of the arguments, all the Beeckman and Reuter cases brought in this city as a result of the alleged libelous publication of the Providence News await the decision of Judge Horward B. Gorham, except the criminal libel case against the Hope Publishing Company. In that case, Judge Gorham found the respondent probably guilty and bound it over to the grand jury, two weeks ago.

In presenting argument for the News Mr. Moss said that whenever anyone becomes a candidate for public office he subjects himself to the searchlight of publicity and newspapers have a right to publish all the facts about him. He said there was a conflict of authority as to how far newspapers could go on such occasions. Some authorities, it was said, hold that publications have a right to make fair comment on the fitness of a candidate, but make statements of fact subject to the risk of their being false. Other authorities hold, he argued, that newspapers were given more lattitude and that the aggrieved party, even though his reputation and character had been put to loss, had no remedy unless he could prove that there was malice in the publication.

Mr. Moss claimed that more weight should be attached to the latter class, and that the Providence News' article made charges as to Mr. Beeckman's fitness for public office, as it had a right to do, and that it had no malicious motive behind it.

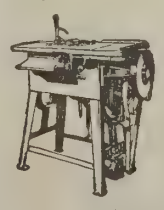
He argued that the cases against Hennessy and Hamilton should be thrown out because neither respondent had been connected by evidence with the publication of the alleged libelous article. It was necessary for the plaintiff to prove actual participation by them in the publication or guilty knowledge, and there was no such evidence of this kind. There was no proof that Hennessy was in general charge of the newspaper as editor or that he had any measure of control over what was published in the newspaper.

The Ludlow
Better Than Foundry Type

YOU may doubt that the Ludlow, as a system, is better than foundry type. But when you say "foundry type" you are thinking of all new type—not the aggregation of worn, broken fonts, short in supply and always half up in forms as found in nearly all prosperous job shops.

Always New Faces—Unlimited Supply

"In the few years we have been operating the Ludlow it has been proved that display composition is much faster by this method than by single types; distribution of dead forms is reduced to the minimum. Another point worth mentioning is the fact that the matrices are practically indestructible, and whenever we buy new fonts we are increasing our equipment, and not making replacements, as would be the case with foundry type."—F. S. Clark, Publisher Tri-City Labor Review, Oakland, Calif.



1. New foundry type may seem to you to be ideal, while it is new, so far as it goes. If you could keep an unlimited supply of new foundry type, constantly in your cases for years, but—nobody ever has been able to do that, and nobody ever will!

2. Worn types not so good. After your new types have been set, used and distributed a few times, or when a rush of work ties up whole fonts in the forms for days at a time, then the Ludlow is seen to be more desirable.

3. After a month's use, even with further purchases, and forever thereafter the comparison is all in favor of the Ludlow. The job containing some worn types cannot compete with the one which is set from all new faces, cast on Ludlow slugs.

4. Slugs are better than single types. Consider the freedom from pi, the ease, and rapidity of make-up, the easy justification and uniformity of letters in height to paper. The line, not the single letter, is the ideal working unit.

5. Recast for duplicate forms. Plates require time and cost money. Duplicate slugs are made while you wait and cost no money. Cast three or four if you like—any quantity needed to fill the press. Wear them out, if you wish. No type money is required to replace them.

WRITERS APPEAL TO LANDIS

Defend Official Scorer Who B. B. Johnson Over-Ruled

At a meeting of the New York Chapter of the Baseball Writers' Association held December 9, the organization went on record in a series of resolutions to the effect that the .400 batting average recently credited to Ty Cobb of the Detroit club by president B. B. Johnson of the American League ought not to be recognized in official record publications. Provision also was made to forward copies of the resolution to Baseball Commissioner Kenesaw M. Landis.

The resolutions follow:

"Whereas the President of the American League has seen fit to ignore the ruling of the official scorer in New York in a game played between New York and Detroit on May 15, 1922, and substituted instead the unofficial score sent out by a press association, and

"Whereas this arbitrary action on the part of the President of the American League, taken without inquiry or investigation, gave a hit to Ty Cobb when the play officially had been scored an error for Scott of the New York club, and

"Whereas this overruling of the official scorer gave Ty Cobb a .400 batting average, causing comment throughout the country that tended to cast discredit on the official scorer, therefore,

"Be it resolved that it is the sense of the New York Chapter of the Baseball Writers' Association that the .400 batting average of Cobb be not recognized and that efforts be made to have it corrected in the official baseball guides, and

"That the action of the President of the American League in arbitrarily changing this score is strongly condemned in that the usefulness of baseball records is thereby seriously impaired, and

"That the members of the New York Chapter of the Baseball Writers' Association should decline to serve as official scorers unless they receive assurance that their scores will be accepted as official and final.

"Be it further resolved that a copy of this resolution be sent to Kenesaw M. Landis, Commissioner of Baseball, and to the President of the American League, and that this action be submitted to the adjourned annual meeting of the Baseball Writers' Association of America."

DETROIT REPORTERS GLAD TO SHIFT COUZENS' DENIALS TO CAPITAL

Former Mayor an Excellent News Source, But His Repudiation of Printed Statements Was so Regular that One Editor Ordered Reporters to Get Denial Along with Interview

By E. T. LOVEDAY

A GROUP of daily newspaper men assigned to a "page one must" story, was grouped about a train in the Michigan Central station at Detroit the other day. They knew that when the conductor raised his hand and the train drew out of the station it would bear away from them the basis of one of the best yarns of the year—but, strange to relate, they were pleased to see the story slipping out of their hands.

A paradox? Yes. And the center of this little story, who sat in one of the Pullmans, en route to Washington, is one of the most paradoxical, as well as one of the most enigmatic men, it was a newspaper man's province to meet.

He is James Couzens, millionaire, new Senator from Michigan and former mayor of Detroit. Newspaper men say he has set a world's record for denials printed in daily newspapers involving stories previously published regarding himself. And he is the man who a few short years ago went into partnership with Henry Ford, to build automobiles, starting with a few hundred dollars and finishing up with no less than $30,000,000.

To newspaper men acquainted with Detroit, Ford and Couzens, while long since separated as business partners, are still in the same classification as to the ease with which they can be converted into copy. Both are almost always good for page one, but Couzens has an irritating habit of denying the stories printed about himself, and his ex-partner Ford makes himself so inaccessible geographically that many a mileage book has been used up hunting him.

A few short years ago these two men, now so much in the public eye, conducted a little machine shop in the poorer section of Detroit. No newspaper men greeted them in the morning as they started to work, or rushed along at their heels as they left for their homes in the evening, to learn their views on the problems confronting the nation.

But all the world loves a winner, and it is not unnatural that the world likes to read about a winner. Ford and Couzens both won in the automobile field. Their winnings have made the income tax a considerable burden.

Henry Ford turned out to be the most advertised man in the world, perhaps, though a negligible amount of it is paid advertising. And Couzens, take the word of Detroit newspaper men, turned out to be the world's champion denial maker.

But this story is of Couzens and not of Ford. The wrathy little mayor of Detroit was in New York when the word came of his appointment to the United States Senate, to take the place made famous or infamous by Senator Truman H. Newberry. It was Ford, incidentally, whom Newberry beat for the seat, further complicating the situation. Ford spent considerable money and a great deal of energy in an attempt to gain the seat, and his ex-partner had it handed to him without lifting a finger.

Well, newspaper men flocked about the Couzens suite in New York when the word came. Newberry and Newberryism were well known enough to make the story well worth while, regardless of the fact that it was Couzens, the man who cleaned up Detroit municipal politics, who got the appointment.

Senator Couzens said a lot, apparently, from the volume of stuff that gained its way into the New York papers, and the volumes which were printed in Detroit.

Then 24 hours after the stories came the inevitable. The phones rang on the city desks in Detroit.

"Senator Couzens is preparing a statement denying the statement that——"

Such was the tenor of the message.

And so "Senator Couzens denies" was seen quite prominently in the headlines.

The Senator took exception to a story printed in one New York paper that made the claim that he, Couzens, and not Ford, was responsible for raising the Ford factory pay to $5 a day some years ago. And he did not like a story printed in another paper which quoted him as saying the Ford Motor Company had not made an advance step in 10 years. He said so in issuing a denial of both.

Perhaps he told the New York city editors he didn't like the way they handled the story, but this writer's province is Detroit, and he doesn't know.

But the climax came when Couzens, on his second from last day of page one prominence, was asked whether he would see Senator Newberry, whom he was succeeding, before he left for Washington.

The senator answered the question. There is no denying that. But what he said was something else again.

One Detroit paper came out with a streamer "Couzens Snubs Newberry."

And again the stone walls of the little gray city hall heaved and shook, and the city hall tower swayed as the papers reached the mayor's office.

And the telephones on the city editors' desks rang again and a secretary said again:

"Senator Couzens denies——"

With the result that a witty news editor on one of the Detroit papers posted a ruling to the effect that:

"All stories involving the doings or sayings of Senator Couzens must henceforth be accompanied by copies of signed denials by the Senator, to expedite getting to press on time."

Although Couzens has always had ample newspaper support in election campaigns in Detroit, he has always "called the papers down" for errors involving himself.

One "error," and a big one, stands out in the history of the city hall during the Couzens regime.

Senator Couzens had perfected the plans for a municipal street railway line, subsequently placed in operation. He announced to newspaper men the workings of the plan, gave them all drawings of the city map lined with the street car system, and says he set a certain deadline, before which the story could not be used.

But one paper stepped out of line, used the story 24 hours before the release, and the other papers raised a howl which, augmented by the Couzens tenor, was heard through Michigan. The "offending" newspaper man said the mayor had forgotten to tell him that there was any release date involved in the story.

Couzens once almost became a p[ub]lisher. He had estimates of the co[st] a Detroit daily made, and negotiated [for] weeks with the owners, but the plan[s] through.

So, getting back to the beginning [of] the story, Detroit newspaper men, re[c]ognizing their ex-mayor as a capable [and] sincere worker, a man who will undo[ubt]edly be a worthy representative of [the] state in the Senate, sighed with relief [as] his train pulled out.

"Wonder how the boys in Washin[gton] will like him," one correspondent [is] wiping his brow. "As a public offic[ial] hand it to him, but as a source of ne[ws] phew!"

Expansion

A million new subscribers were linked to the Bell System during the past two years—putting into operation a million new routes of talk, and a corresponding increase in all intervening facilities such as switchboards, cable and long distance lines.

No other country is so well equipped as the United States for telephone communication. Yet, because of this—because the telephone is so useful—the demand for service keeps growing greater.

The growth of telephone demand in the United States is greater than the growth of population. It is an intensive growth. An increasing percentage of the population is seeking telephone service.

The Bell System is providing for more investment, further technical achievement, more wires, switchboards and stations—and more subscribers. The American people require the best service. The best service means the most comprehensive service, not only for the necessities of to-day, but for the necessities of the future.

NEW ENGLAND

The New England States as a group lead the country in many lines and a wise advertiser or manufacturer will advertise a path to their door.

New England shows an increase in the number of workers engaged in manufacture.

Statistics show that two-thirds of all the clocks, fire alarms, silver plated ware, corsets and ammunition manufactured in the United States are made in New England.

More than fifty per cent of all the brass made in the United States is produced in these states.

Nearly seven hundred places in New England can be termed manufacturing towns.

Here we find communities where intelligent, productive people have made permanent homes.

The daily newspapers will move every day an enormous volume of merchandise to the consumer, if you will do your part and use adequate advertising space.

These New England dailies covering the territory from the east to the west and from the north to the south, will carry your message to the buying public of this territory.

CHARGE MAGAZINE SPREADS KU KLUX PROPAGANDA

"The field of the Country Editor is the country editorate. We intend to reach not only the country editor himself but also his readers and make them our contributors and constituency. In addition we purpose that this shall be a metropolitan magazine to serve the best interest of the vast numbers of country editors and to that end will add articles by prominent people to the other contributions.

"No, the Country Editor is not in any way connected with or affiliated with the Ku Klux Klan. The Country Editor has no more interest in the Ku Klux Klan than has Hearst's International, which, I see is advertising an article on the Klan for its next issue. Ours is only a news interest.

The Eilert Printing Company said:

"We print the Country Editor, as well as many other publications. Our relation to all is as printers to the publishers. We have no other interest whatever in the Country Editor and no knowledge of its policies or purposes other than its own printed editorial announcement to promote American ideals and institutions. We know nothing whatever of the Ku Klux Klan excepting what we read in the public press."

EDITOR & PUBLISHER queried contributors to the two "achievements" of the magazine as to whether or not they had knowledge of any alleged Klan affiliation of the Country Editor, but all who replied were unanimous in saying they knew of none.

Persons who have had signed articles or are featured in unsigned articles for the November and December issues are:

Chesterville Morrow, Samuel Gompers, Walter Kutzleb, William H. Anderson, Avondale, Edward Hancox, Teasdale Randolph, Elbert Hubbard II, John Temple Graves, Clifford Goodrich, Joseph M. Keatinge, Merton Clivette, Howard Egbert, M. J. Murphy, B. Wheeler, Lld., Federal Prohibition Commissioner R. A. Haynes, Courtland Smith, Bertha Taylor Voorhorst Major Honore J. Jaxon, Rev. Richard Hergarty, B. D., and Major A. J. MacElroy, D. S. O.

Courtland Smith, for many years head of the American Press Association and now associated with Will H. Hays as secretary of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, whose article, "The Country Editor," appears in the December edition, said:

"I wrote an article for some number of the Country Editor. Mr. Hays was asked for an interview, which I did not approve because the magazine was too young. Then a former associate in the American Press Association, Clarence N. Cook, in whom I had every confidence, called, told me that he was interested in the magazine and asked if I would write an article. He explained that the purpose of the magazine was solely to fight the battles of the country publisher. As I have been doing that all my business life I was very glad to write an article for him. If the publication serves any other interest than that of the country press, and I can hardly believe that it does, then the situation was misrepresented to me."

Clarence N. Cook, mentioned by Mr. Smith, is connected with the Snodgrass & Gayness Advertising Agency, 489 Fifth avenue, New York. He stated to EDITOR & PUBLISHER that he had asked prominent men for articles and interviews for the Country Editor merely through a friendly interest in Mr. Wupperman's new business enterprise and had absolutely no connection with it. He knew Mr. Wupperman had guaranteed payment for all the printing bills of the Country Editor, incurred by Mr. Randolph, but was certain the agreement did not include the Klan advertisement in question. He asserted positively that neither he nor Wupperman were associated in any way with the Klan.

W. J. Murphy, president of the New York & Pennsylvania Joint Stock Land Bank, with offices at 61 Broadway, New York, who has a signed article in the December edition, said he also had been interested in the Country Editor by Clarence N. Cook, who had introduced Mr. Wupperman to him at his office with the suggestion that he write a story, on the relation of the country editor to the joint stock land bank, as a publicity idea for reaching the farmer through the country editors. He took advantage of what he thought was a good chance to get some advertising and ordered 100 copies of the December edition. He said Wupperman showed him a letter from Judge E. H. Gary, on the latter's personal stationery, ordering several thousand copies of the November Country Editor containing the labor story, "Profit vs. Use" by Samuel Gompers, as illustrating the publicity value of the magazine. Mr. Murphy said he knew Mr. Cook as an advertising man, but had never met Mr. Wupperman before. He had no knowledge of any Klan connection of the publication or any one associated with it. Certainly he had none, he said.

Letters have been received recently by newspaper editors throughout the country soliciting subscriptions for the Country Editor at $2 a year, saying:

MR. PUBLISHER: We want you to subscribe to The Country Editor. We want to work for country newspapers, and we can't accomplish big results unless you are a subscriber. It is our ambition to go before national advertisers with a hundred per cent country newspaper backing.

Our Credit Information Bureau alone is worth several times the two dollars per year. As a subscriber to The Country Editor, you would be privileged to write us for a credit rating on any firm or individual who desired to advertise in your newspaper. This service alone ought to save you many dollars each year.

And there is our Bad Debt Collection Bureau. Another service that is essential to your newspaper. As a subscriber you could file an unpaid advertising account for collection, and all the influence of The Country Editor would be used in the collection of that advertising account. This is an expensive service, which we fully realize, but the only cost to you, in addition to your $2 subscription to The Country Editor, would be 15 per cent on collections actually made through our efforts.

Surely you would like to have an efficient collection bureau like this working on your unpaid advertising accounts.

As we are not foreign advertising representatives in any sense of the word, you can instantly realize the extent of the value of our efforts in your behalf. If you have no foreign advertising representatives, you ought to appoint one. And have only one, because advertising agents find confusion in billing an expensive operation. No service is worth a hurrah unless it is based on concentration.

We have told our story. Send us your subscription and invest $2 in an enterprise which you can ill afford to do without.

THE COUNTRY EDITOR PUB. COMPANY.

The first number, or "achievement," carried the following self-introduction:

THE EFFICIENT VOICE

There is a voice in the Great Republic which speaks constantly, and yet is unheard, almost unknown, in the mighty metropolitan centers.

It is the calm, wholesome voice of The Country Editors of these States and Territories of America.

That voice, efficient, strong-sensed, alert, informed, is being heard in the aggregate, and individually, through the pages of The Country Editor.

This, then, is the Magazine of the Rural Fourth Estate of the Territorial United States—a Tribune of the Homeland.

The currents of written oracle have for long flowed outward from the towering tripods of the great cities, moulding and leading the thought of the nation according to the standards of Metropolitan Journalism. Henceforth, through this channel of The Country Editor, the stream of popular arcadian thought shall contact the urban currents and flow in invigorating expression throughout metropolis and homestead.

To promote the ideals and institutions of America—that is the Watchword—and to this task The Country Editor invites the twelve thousand rural editors of the nation, their staff associates and their constituents.

In view of the connection of A. E. Wupperman, with the J. W. Wupperman Angostura Bitters Agency, Inc., an article, appearing in the November edition of the Country Editor, entitled "A Monopoly in Restraint of Healing," signed Æsculapius, attacking the American Medical Association for its anti-patent medicine policy, is interesting. An editorial note appended says, "It cannot anesthetize the public with a hypodermic injection of bunk." The article concludes:

"In a series of articles we propose to expose the methods of the association and we shall be glad to have submitted to us facts relating to the systematic persecution of private physicians and others who have incurred its displeasure. We hope the great body of American editors, who are supporters of this magazine, will follow these articles closely and will use in their columns such extracts as may seem to them pertinent and appropriate."

AN A B C OF ADVERTISING

Roberts' Handbook Aims to Help Newspaper Solicitors

Genuine service to the small city newspaper solicitor and the merchants whose business he seeks is contained in the 44 pages of a vest-pocket-size handbook compiled by A. T. Roberts, advertising manager of the Columbus (Ga.) Enquirer-Sun. It merits the title of "A B C's of Newspaper Advertising," and justifies the author's conclusion that 'the man who is genuinely interested will finish this booklet with a fairly good idea of advertising and the factors to be considered in its preparation."

Introductory chapters tell in everyday non-technical words the nature of advertising, the mission it performs, the selection that the merchant makes among his stock for each day's copy, and the use of type and display. Retailers are advised to request advertising matter and cuts from the manufacturers who supply them with nationally advertised products and to use these aids not necessarily as they are received but in the form that best fits the individual piece of copy. The use of illustrations with type gets several pages of concise description.

Layout also is discussed in simple terms. The amateur advertiser is instructed in the elements of printing measurements, standard rule borders, the use of proofs and stamped impressions in locating illustrations in the copy, and decision on words to be displayed. "Get your display heading right, then condense the supporting or explanatory facts you wish to present into as few words and as simple language a subject will permit," the author ad

Good lettering in layout as an i the printer can be achieved with practice, the advertiser is told, an layouts are illustrated as wo models. Good advertising position defined according to well known c laws, the primary need of good above all other advertising qualific is stressed again and again, an booklet concludes with several pag type samples that are in daily u advertising display.

WHAT OUR READERS SAY

The Medical Editor

WINNIPEG, MANITOBA.

To EDITOR & PUBLISHER: Palmer Smith has touched something very close to my heart in "Can Medicine's Place in the News Be Improved?"

Most emphatically it can. For at present it scarcely occupies any "place" at all. And yet there is no greater source or better source of news stories than the doctor. The doctor's stories are the simon pure human interest. They don't need stretching or "doctoring up" either. All that is necessary is to tell them in the simplest language possible. But we do not get them. There are very few papers that make much attempt to work this field, and under the present conditions it is probably just as well they don't.

Many of the human interest stories that come within the doctor's ken are almost sacred. Confidences must be kept inviolate, and if some indiscriminate attempt were made to worm these from the medical profession, and then exploit them in the news columns the result would be disastrous.

Not many doctors have much of a "nose for news." And most of them have very little time to spare even if they were inclined to write for a paper. Furthermore, their writing would almost certainly be unintelligible to the layman. So it is evident the proposition of getting the right angle on this class, of news is by no means easy. It seems to me that it is necessary the "medical" reporter must have more than a smattering of medicine. In fact, he should be a fully qualified M. D. On the other hand, he should be content to earn his living as a newspaper man and not as a doctor. I don't mean that he should refuse to give aid when it lies in his power. On the contrary, it would most certainly be his duty to do all that he could for the relief of human beings in distress—but without fee.

I think that a medical man who maintained the dignity of the calling and the dignity of his profession as a writer, would have little difficulty in assuring very friendly relationship with the medical fraternity, and he would certainly be a valuable asset to his paper. I believe it would be quite possible for a paper to assist one of its news men who had a natural bent, or desire for the study of medicine, to obtain the qualification of a physician and to protect itself for the investment by both a bond and a contract for a term of years. Personally, I have never felt any keen desire to earn my living as a doctor, but I have always had a very keen desire to study medicine and can conceive of no more satisfactory way to do the greatest good to the greatest number than through the medium of the daily paper. One thing is very certain. The doctor on the newspaper would be a very busy man.

There are other lines of newspaper work in which the writer should be something of a specialist, but none in which it is so imperative that the writer should have qualifications like Caesar's wife. For instance, it is quite usual to put the "cub" to report railroad happenings—with ludicrous results very often that do not tend to enhance the value or the standing of the paper in the railroad man's eyes, and there are an awful lot of railroad men. The railroad reporter should study his work very carefully and become fully cognizant of the various departments, their relationship to each other, etc. A good knowledge of telegraphy will help the man on the railroad run a lot more than most of them realize. There are two other professions that I believe should be represented on the editorial staff of a paper by specialists—accountancy and law.

William Allen White in the Right

OMAHA, NEB.

To EDITOR & PUBLISHER: The case against William White, an Emporia, Kas., editor, charged with violating the industrial court law, was dismissed on December 9, by Judge Harris.

Editor White is right mad as he made the following statement:

"Of course, I am bitterly disappointed at the outcome of this case. I was arrested during the late railroad strike for posting in my window a placard declaring half-way sympathy with the strike, in which I did not wholly believe. The governor had ordered all placards down and I defied his order so as to test the case in courts, because good lawyers said it was an illegal order. The test was brought because I felt that Governor Allen in his anxiety to make the industrial court function, overstepped the law in his forbidding an outside party to the controversy and because I sincerely felt it was against good public policy. The point I raised never has been decided in the courts. Here was a chance to decide it.

"Now, to understand exactly why the state did not want it decided a few facts must be known. First, the attorney general advised the governor against making the arrest, directing that I had not violated the picketing law, and the attorney general would not draw up the warrant. Judge Huggins, chairman of the industrial court, declared publicly that I had not violated the law. He agreed with the attorney general. Judge McDermott, of th industrial court, felt that an arrest should b made and is responsible for the warrant, signe by a clerk in the governor's office. The warra alleged two things for which there was not th slightest evidence, and that is why Judge M Dermott is afraid to have it tried. The tw things were a charge of conspiracy with thre men I never saw or heard of, and a charg that I had stopped Sante Fe trains, which wa silly. Now, the reason those two tricky charg were made was to prevent me from going in mediately into supreme court and demandin relief on a habeas corpus. This I could hav done if the warrant had been drawn, merel alleging the facts in the case. I begged th governor to amend the warrant in accordanc with the undisputed facts so that he could g the supreme court to decide the fundament questions at issue in the supreme court. I ha his assurance before he left for the governor conference in the east that some way would b found to get the case into the courts. Bu Judge McDermott vetoed them. Of course, a the attorney general's office did not believe i the case, as it had been brought against the judgment, they would not try it. And so w go into the next labor controversy without a important point settled, which might have bee settled.

"Under the promise of the trial I asked tha the placards come down and they came down a over the state. I am now denied a trial, an what is more, the state has not dared to tr anyone else for displaying that poster, th banks, all the large stores, hotels and office all over Kansas displayed the objectionabl placards.

"It all amounts to this:

"This industrial court law, which I believ was written to establish law and order in in dustrial controversies, will never stand in th books if under it men are arrested on trick warrants that the state dare not defend in th courts.

"Prussian methods on the part of officers o the law, on behalf of the law, without war rant of law, are worse than lawless method of capital and labor in their battles. If I wa within the law in contending for the right o free utterance for the public wholly outsid of the controversy, then I should not have bee subject to a shanghaied arrest. If I am wron and the industrial court law does gag the pub lic whose interests the law should protect the I should have been tried and put into jai I was "ku kluxed" into an arrest by a cou that did not have the guts to pull out the shirt tails and give a ku klux parade.

"The attorney general and the presidin judge of the court seemed to think they had case against me, and Judge McDermott, wh is responsible for my arrest, has neither th common decency nor the manly courage t come down and try the case on its merits. I trying to put teeth in the law last summe Judge McDermott got the front tooth knocke out of the law by the election of Davis, wh may feel that a heart in the law is more im portant than teeth, but the people voted for th law itself by electing an overwhelming legisla tive republican majority, pledged to sustain th law."

Let us hear from some of the editors through out the United States on this deal.

It Is the Public Ledger

PHILADELPHIA, December 5, 1922.

To EDITOR & PUBLISHER: In your issue o December 2 is a very nice notice of the change on the Public Ledger staff, which is very muc appreciated; but for the life of me I canno understand why you call it the Ledgers, and th two Ledgers. You might as well call it th twelve Ledgers, as we print that many edition There is but one Public Ledger. You neve speak of the Boston Globe as the Globes.

PAPER CONTEST FAIR FEATURE

M. V. Atwood Judges Florida Dailies and Weeklies

A newspaper contest, open to all Florida, was a feature of the state fair at Jacksonville, held November 18 to 25. The contest, the second to be held at the fair, was arranged by the general extension division of the University of Florida, B. C. Riley, director. M. V. Atwood, of the New York State College of Agriculture, Cornell University, and publisher of the Groton (N. Y.) Journal and Courier, was the judge.

The judging, in which first places only were awarded, was by classes, six-column dailies competing against each other in front page make-up, editorial page, farm news, and all around excellence. Seven column dailies competed among themselves in the same way, while the weeklies of the state had a competition all their own but in the same classes.

The Miami Herald swept the decks, as it did last year, for the seven column dailies. Of the six column dailies, the Gainesville Sun drew first place for front page make-up, the Clearwater News for editorial page, the Bradentown Herald for the best handling of farm news, while the Gainesville Sun got the award for best all-around paper in its class.

EDITORIAL

A STORY THAT NEEDS TELLING

TEN little Congressmen need a visit to the woodshed. Two thousand daily newspapers and ten thousand weekly newspapers ought to be waiting there for them—each with a cat-o'-nine-tails. Ten little Congressmen need a reminder that promises made to the newspapers four months before election day have to be kept when Congress reconvenes a month after Election Day. Otherwise ten little Congressmen may be joined by other little Congressmen in thinking that promises made to the newspapers are like other campaign promises and may be forgotten whenever it is convenient. And that won't do.

Publishers of all newspapers and periodicals using the second-class mailing privilege are united in demanding that Congress remove at least a part of the excessive levies on transportation of publications. They united when they were told by Congress that no publisher could expect relief from these war-time taxes on mailing privileges unless all publishers were agreed on a program. That program was embodied in the measure known as the Kelly Bill. It was placed before Congress last Spring by Representative Kelly, himself a newspaper publisher, and it was endorsed by representatives of the daily newspapers, the weeklies, the magazines and the trade press.

When it went before the Postal Committee of the House, a favorable report was delayed, the committee said, pending the findings of the Joint Postal Commission, a combination Congressional-Post Office body, which had been appointed two years ago to look into the methods and costs of handling publications in the mails. This report would be rendered before December 1, the House committee believed, but if it were not, the Kelly legislation would be taken up about that date and reported for enactment as a temporary measure pending the postal commission's final report. All that took place last Summer, when Congressmen saw a dreary November in the offing. Individual promises were given and accepted and the publishers awaited the short session which convened last week.

But—when Congress reconvened for its last meeting, postal committee members found it hard to remember that they had promised action on the Kelly Bill. They found that the Joint Postal Commission had spent about $300,000 in its two years' existence and that it had nothing to report, that it would need another million dollars before it could proceed to business. They also found that some members of Congress who were directly interested in the Joint Postal Commission would cease to be members of Congress after March 4 next. And they suspected that if the Kelly Bill was passed, there would be a very, very slim chance of getting an appropriation of $1,000,000 for the Joint Postal Commission past a Budget Director and an Appropriations Committee bent on economy. And the publishers' committee received a very chilly reception.

One scheduled meeting of the committee was cancelled because most of the members discovered previous engagements. A second held this week resulted in the tabling of the Kelly Bill by a vote of 10 to 5, Republicans and Democrats joining in opposition. The Joint Postal Commission excuse was again paraded and the committee approved an appropriation of $950,000 for its work. Promises made to the Postmaster General, to individual publishers and to Representative Kelly were treated as the ex-Kaiser treated inconvenient treaties. Figures advanced by influential publishers that their costs had doubled under the war-time postal tariffs were thrust aside, without consideration.

The next election is two years in the future, but a number of Congressmen who voted to table the Kelly Bill have eager eyes for places on the public payroll after next March and a million dollar fund for an investigating committee might care for several "lame ducks."

Congressmen and millions of other people might be interested in learning why a commission can spend two years and $300,000 in finding out nothing and follow that by asking for another million dollars with no promise of any greater result. An audit of the commission's expenditures might be enlightening as to the reasons for the Kelly Bill's fate.

AN AMERICAN'S CREED

COMPILED BY CHARLES W. MILLER
Vicksburg (Miss.) Herald

FOR we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.—(II. Cor. v: 1). Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you: But rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that, when His glory shall be revealed ye may be glad also with exceeding joy. But let none of you suffer as a murderer, or as a thief, or as an evildoer, or as a busybody in other men's matters.—(I. Peter iv: 12, 13, 15).

"IS THIS PROPAGANDA?"

"I AM enclosing a copy of 'Railroad Data,' which is issued weekly. In your opinion, is this likely of real service to newspapers, or is it, in your judgment, propaganda?" The inquirer is W. W. Harris, publicity man for the Association of Railway Executives of New York. The clipsheet which his letter enclosed declares in an "ear" that "the material in this bulletin is from authoritative sources. It is issued for the information of the public." Its information appears under headlines such as "Movement of Coal by railroads far in excess of other years," "Railroads obtain only 4 per cent of capital raised in October," "I. C. C. Says Rail Earnings Inadequate," "Ford's Road Shows Deficit for 10 Months," etc., etc.

Mr. Harris, himself a newspaper man of long experience, doesn't need any assistance in answering his question. He knows that his clipsheet is of service to editors because it is the only source of information on railroad affairs that has not been closed to them since the advent of the "director of public relations."

He also knows that it is propaganda for the interests which pay his salary and the other expenses of publication. He knows when the data he presents is in strict accord with all the facts and he also knows when it is in accord with the facts that he wants to bring to the attention of the editor.

He knows that, but the editor doesn't, and the editor who accepts at face value and prints substantially what Railroad Data gives him exposes himself to the danger of printing a story that is true so far as it goes, but which may be far from true when facts which are hidden are brought to light.

It is the ease with which a hard-pressed newspaper man can use the prepared copy of the Railway Executives and other propagandists that makes their clipsheets insidious. They discourage first-hand investigation, as they are intended to do, and they work their way into newspaper columns without half the scrutiny and supervision that is exercised over the police reporter's story of a trifling murder. No matter how upright and honorable may be the aims of the railway executives and their press agent, the clipsheet method of giving the newspapers information to the exclusion of direct contact with the original source of news, is always open for the promotion of plans and ideas that may be neither upright nor honorable. It is the editor's job to keep awake to schemes of the latter kind and to expose them before their fruition. He cannot do it in an emergency if he permits his news sources to dry up and his sense of values to become dulled when times are quiet.

So the answer to Mr. Harris is that his service to the editor is of very doubtful benefit to the newspaper or its readers and that it is definitely and indisputably propaganda.

INTIMIDATION

BALD and bold intimidation is the messa carried to newspaper publishers by a letter Thompson-Koch Advertising Agency in C cinnati sent out last week. It was a "request" behalf of a holding company, Sterling Products, I that its name be listed in the daily quotations of stc transactions on the New York Stock Exchang "every single day, always kept standing and ne omitted." Added to this request, which is to be call to the attention of the financial editor, is the adv that "our clients are among the largest users advertising space in your paper."

The mailed fist is ill concealed beneath the vel glove. It is true that many of the products control by this stock corporation are and have long been lar users of newspaper space. They are proprieta articles which have escaped the storm that swe many such advertisements into newspaper discard the past few years. The stock of the holding co pany is listed on the Exchange. All these are tr but of what merit are they as arguments that ne paper readers should see kept constantly in the W Street news the name of Sterling Products, I whether it is traded in or not.

That is plain trickery, flagrant juggling with class of news that stands in little enough rep among newspaper editors, but which is relied u by a certain portion of every newspaper's read Indirectly it is also an attempt to secure by ste every day a line of advertising that the company not paid for and to which it has absolutely no ti That advertising might be of little value to products advertised in the regular channels, but might be of inestimable value to certain gentlem whose eyes are not on the factory but on the ma facture of stock-jobbing profits. The editor v grants this agency's request—"so we can tell clients, who will appreciate it"—is false to his read and deserves the low estimate which such lett show is held of his probity and ability by advertis and agencies who can use him as a catspaw concealed designs.

JOHN WANAMAKER

JOHN WANAMAKER left his impress u modern business and civilization in many w that were known only to himself, but he left impression that has affected profoundly the cond of business, and especially the newspaper busin in recent years. DAILY and SUNDAY

WANAMAKER—DISCOVERER OF NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING

volved in an advertising contract up to that time.

Today the Wanamaker Philadelphia store is the largest retail user of advertising space in the world, and it uses newspaper space exclusively. Three to four full pages are used daily except Sunday in the newspapers of Philadelphia and three half-pages are used weekly in twenty nearby towns. The Wanamaker stores never use Sunday newspapers.

The Wanamaker style of advertising is distinctive and has been widely copied, not only in this country, but in England, France and Germany. What is meant by Wanamaker style is well illustrated by a story told in connection with the early efforts of Gordon H. Cilley, advertising manager of the John Wanamaker store at Philadelphia.

A large purchase of rugs had been made at a price that warranted a special sale. Great plans were made for the rug sale, and Mr. Cilley gave his own attention to writing the advertisement announcing the event. Mr. Cilley put the best that was in him into the effort as it was really his first big sale after taking his new position. He put every bit of salesmanship and all his advertising and editorial knowledge into the work of making that advertisement. When he had finished he was proud of the results, and well he might have been, for from every advertising angle it was a masterpiece.

When every correction had been made, as is the practice, Mr. Cilley took the advertisement into Mr. Wanamaker for his approval. The great merchant read it through. He praised it—he even did better than that, and in effect said that he did not see how any person could read that advertisement and resist going to Wanamaker's and buying one of those rugs—and then tore down the carefully built structure with seven words:

—"but it's too much like an advertisement."

Then Mr. Wanamaker, who wrote rapidly but with great care, began to mark out the most telling selling sentences and rewrite new ones in their places. When he had finished he had before him the story of how and why Wanamaker's had purchased those rugs; why a sale was to be held, and why purchasers should be interested in that sale.

Mr. Cilley has been advertising manager of Wanamaker's for many years, now, but he confesses that that was the last time he attempted to write an advertisement. Since then he has been satisfied, he says, to write the daily news of the Wanamaker store for the public.

In keeping with this there is even now hanging above Mr. Cilley's desk a framed order signed by John Wanamaker, which reads:

"Your sole business as a writer of our advertising is to find out the truth regarding the merchandise and tell it in plain words, and as briefly as you can."

The policy that governed John Wanamaker in placing advertising as well as his advertising style should be of interest to every merchant, big and small, throughout the world. Thirteen years ago the Wanamaker Philadelphia store began to gradually withdraw from all media except newspapers.

This was decided upon after careful investigation of every form of advertising and results.

In explaining this, Mr. Cilley said:

"We believe people have the right to have advertising where they want it. The people do not want advertising on billboards that obstruct their view, disfigure their community; they do not want it pushed in under their door or thrown on their stoop, to add to the dirt of the street that passes their homes.

"The newspaper is the property of the person who purchases it. The regular reader comes to look upon it as 'his paper.' He looks upon everything in it from a personal view point. He trusts it and believes in it or he would not be a regular reader. Therein he expects to find news, instruction, entertainment and advertisements. He accepts the advertisements as a part of 'his paper,' which increases his interest and trust.

"To force an advertisement is bad policy, hence we place our advertisements where people want them—in the newspapers."

In this connection it may be stated that Wanamaker's give no complimentary advertisements, no matter what cause they are solicited for. Mr. Cilley even goes so far as to say such advertising is unfair to the newspapers, as the amount in the end comes from the merchant's advertising appropriation and would otherwise go to them.

Mr. Wanamaker's activities were many. He was in one way and another connected with probably sixty institutions, charitable, religious and financial—and for him to be connected meant that he was into their affairs "over his head" all the time.

When in Philadelphia Mr. Wanamaker was at his office each day receiving the reports of his various managers and giving interviews to people whom he had requested to call upon him. He worked wherever he happened to be, and never lost an opportunity to add to the scraps of paper in his pockets that carried, generally, advertising thoughts.

But his friends and those who knew him best agree that he did his best writing between 5 and 6 o'clock in the morning.

He left no better indication of the Christian spirit that pervaded his business mind than this one of his signed editorials written six years ago:

"Our need is the greater fact that the greatest demand of America and of the world is for men trained in principle of integrity, educated in mind and heart, skilled to work with their fingers and their eyes and their brains; men that can not only support themselves and make a home for the little family; men to be worthy citizens, whose first love is God and their country, their homes, and the flag of their nation; men not dependent upon others for support—self-supporting, self-reliant, self-respecting men; men who have got the inspiration that is much more than making a living; men who are intensively and extensively concerned to see that every other young fellow, so far as their influence and ability extend, shall have such an opportunity to win a worthy manhood as they have had themselves."

IOWA FARMERS' UNION PAPERS?

Directors to Consider Establishing Interlocking System

Organization of an interlocking system of Farmers' Union newspapers for every county in the State of Iowa will be discussed by the directors of the union at a meeting to be held in Des Moines, December 27, according to Milo Reno, president.

The country papers will be fostered by the State organization, rather than organized by individual county unions. At a recent meeting of the directors the proposal of a State paper was definitely abandoned, although no plans were made for a revival of the plan.

Wabash Plain Dealer Bankrupt

The Plain Dealer Company, publishers of the Wabash (Ind.) Plain Dealer, was placed in the hands of L. L. Baushke and Charles S. Haas as receivers by the Wabash Circuit Court. They state that they intend to continue publishing the Plain Dealer, as well as to continue the job printing business until they are able to dispose of the property to the best advantage. Several possible purchasers are in touch with the receivers, and they state that there is a prospect of an early sale. Holders of claims against the paper are asked to file them with the receivers as soon as possible.

DOLLAR PULLERS

Advertising and circulation managers are always on the lookout for new ideas that will increase advertising receipts and win new circulation. Your idea for increasing advertising or circulation may not appeal to your manager, but it may be just the thing that some other manager wants. EDITOR & PUBLISHER will pay $1 for each idea printed under this head. The fact that the idea is now being used in your city does not bar it from the department. Address your communication to the DOLLAR PULLER EDITOR. When they appear clip them and mail them in and receive payment. Unavailable ideas will not be returned.

A NEWSPAPER in a city of 80,000 population has found it profitable to set apart space in its business where suburban residents and farmers may leave packages while they are shopping and as a place for families to be reunited after splitting up for shopping tours. Persons using the service generally find the time opportune to renew their subscriptions, place classified matter, etc.—B. A. T.

To insure full benefit from "Dollar Pullers," the general manager of one Ohio newspaper checks the list weekly, picking out those he thinks practical and suitable for his territory. These are then turned over to the advertising department for tryout. Report is made on them at the end of the month and those that have proved unusually successful are then filed away for future use.—B. A. T.

Tieup with national advertisers by listing the stores that handle nationally-advertised goods and the lines they handle. Let your readers know you have such a list and invite them to use it. For instance, if a person wants to buy a Gillette razor and don't know where to get it, he writes, phones or calls in person and gets the information from you. Lists of all stores handling the lines should be supplied to each inquirer.—B. A. T.

The Dallas News is now offering radio parts (in addition to complete radio sets) to the boys who will bring in subscriptions for the News. The parts are kept on display at the newspaper office and the boys are invited to come in and inspect them. The more expensive the part, the more subscribers necessary to obtain it, is of course the scheme of this promotion plan.—J. T.

A Dallas department store recently started a "different" way of building good-will. This store advertised that $125 was going to be donated during the week to two Dallas charitable organizations, and that the donations would be in accordance with the express wishes of the store's customers. Each 10-cent purchase gave the buyer one vote. This scheme helped sales as well as good-will. But readers of the newspapers did not think of it as a scheme to get business. They felt that the store would have given this money anyway, and the fact that the store was asking them to vote was because it wanted them to share in the donation. This scheme made more interesting advertising, and since that is what newspapers are working for I recommend this as a good suggestion to make to some storekeeper in your city.—J. T.

A local newspaper put across an excellent scheme in connection with a theatre in the following manner: The newspaper cameraman snapped shots of crowds from concealed points and later published the photos. Any person able to identify themselves in the photos, were entitled to two free tickets to the theatre, upon presenting the clipped photo in person, at the office of the paper. The plan created considerable excitement and greatly increased the local circulation department.—R. W. S.

A local daily has instituted an excellent plan in creating advertising stimulus in their classified ad department by sending out slips to advertisers, having them fill in a short story on the results gained by their insertion. The ad and story are printed at the top of the page. This creates the interest and attention of prospects with the result that the prestige of the section gains considerably.—R. W. S.

Many firms that cannot afford large advertising space in the papers become discouraged by the full-page and double-page advertising of the department stores. To compete with the department store Christmas goods advertising, sixty five druggists are carying a co-operative advertisement of a full page in the San Antonio Express, the firm names and addresses being grouped alphabetically in the center of the page, the advertising being arranged around these. In this way the page advertisment costs each firm but a small amount. By studying its field closely a newspaper will find many opportunities for running group or co-operative advertising from small advertisers who might not otherwise advertise.—W. H. M.

On the opening of a new half million dollar hotel at Tyler, Texas, on Thanksgiving day, the Dallas News sent a staff correspondent and ad solicitor to Tyler and issued an eight page section the following Sunday, about half of which was used for a write-up of the new hotel and other enterprises of Tyler, the rest of the space being filled with Tyler advertising, practically every advertisement extending congratulations to the new hotel management and to the city generally on its improved hotel facilities. The plan may be successfully followed wherever a neighboring town successfully completes any project in which there is general community interest and pride.—W. H. M.

In order to get early buyers at their sale one store offered the first 200 customers a free "Grab Package." Each package contained useful articles worth coming for and brought out a big crowd for the early morning.—H. J. W.

A superfluous word page is a nice variation from the more common missing word pages. In each ad insert an additional or superfluous word. When found these words make a complete sentence. Award prizes to those who send in the neatest, nearest or correct answers. —R. B. M.

Some newspapers overlook the most obvious ways of building up classified advertising. But the Houston Chronicle is not one of those newspapers. Here is a sample of the ways they are building classified. "If you are interested in 'Want' Ads and have occasion to use them now and then, The Chronicle has something to give you free of charge that will help you in wording your ads. The Chronicle has published a broadsheet entitled 'How to Word a Want Ad to Make It Pay.'" The advertisement is replete with Want Ad information. It explains in details how to write any kind of a Want Ad, and gives outlines for guidance in the wording of an ad for any classification. If you want one, call at the front counter of The Chronicle office, and it will be yours for the asking." While this is not a new idea, it is a good one, and I have noticed that an increasing number of the country's best newspapers have adopted it during the last year.—J. T.

A San Antonio (Tex.), clothes cleaner advertises that he will present you with a new suit of clothes to take the place of your old suit if you will join his pressing club, having your suit cleaned and pressed once a week for which you will pay him $1.00 per week. Such an unusual offer will attract attention, no matter how it is featured in the advertising columns. Perhaps some cleaner in your town would like to try this idea.—J. T.

One method of attracting attention to classified advertising is to print a street address in small type in the classified columns once a week. The householder at that address is then entitled to run a classified advertisement, not exceeding twenty words, free for one week, the space to be used within ten days. Not only does it cause readers to peruse the columns, but it also affords the winners an opportunity of seeing the value of classified when they use the awarded space.—T.

An editorial on the "neighborhood store," brought in considerable space surrounding from suburban and corner groceries, drug stores, and other lines of business away from the business center.—T.

"You can select any dish to suit your taste from these menus," said one newspaper in leading off a double page of restaurant, cafe and hotel dining room advertisements for the next Sunday.—T.

Canvass the office buildings in your city for classified from attorneys, chiropractors, unusual services, typewriter exchanges, etc., and you'll get real results if you have faith in your pulling power. One such newspaper has found the plan to be excellent, renewing the advertisements weekly.—B. A. T.

Apartment house owners in some cities are now supplying tenants with free daily and Sunday newspapers as a part of the service. Owners in your city would probably contract with you exclusively if the idea were put up to them.—B. A. T.

SMALL COPY, PACKING A PUNCH, SELLS GOODS

he has found useful in making small copy effective. "People are immensely interested in the things they buy and everything has a certain glamor of romance. They like to know how a piece of merchandise is made, where it comes from and any odd and curious points concerning it and its uses.

"One time I was up in Maine. I had some potatoes to sell through newspaper advertising. Instead of just bluntly offering potatoes for sale for so much, it happened that I was able to tell an interesting story about a gnome-like old man, who resembled a fairy tale character, who had cultivated the potatoes. It led up to why they were especially good to eat. The story of it aroused much human interest and sold the potatoes.

"'Tell something interesting about the merchandise' is my rule number one. We aim to make each little 'ad' short and crisp, each one a story, and each one written in very clear simple English. We endeavor also to make the headline tell practically the whole story, a newspaper device. Here are three:

"'ABOUT ONE HUNDRED KINDS OF INK' (this was by actual count).
"'WE FIX UP FOUNTAIN PENS.'
"'FASCINATING NEW DOLLS.'

"In connection with our advertising for Johnson's Bookstore, we have to boil the essence of a new book's appeal into two or three sentences, but to arrive at those sentences ye have probably gone through the larger part of the book. It's real work to write a small 'ad' that's effective.

"We work closely with our clients. Sometimes we get the clerks together and get ideas for copy from them which helps us keep the advertisements fresh. We use plain, readable type and keep wholly away from zig-zag, puzzling layouts and italics. We avoid fancy borders. We employ a trade-mark or slogan only when it contributes to the effectiveness of what we have to say. The 'ads' always appear in preferred position, which prevents them from being buried and makes them 'stick out.'"

This advertising has made a list of firms, many of which would not otherwise be consistent advertisers, regular users of space and many have grown from small to good-size space buyers. One of the most prominent is True Brothers, jewelers.

Through continual hammering away in small spaces, in the Springfield and surrounding town newspapers, the firm has secured the reputation of being undoubtedly the outstanding quality jewelry house of western New England and one of the most notable stores in the country. Any newspaper would welcome the amount of its advertising now.

A piece of copy reproduced here shows the store's 21st anniversary full page rotogravure advertisement in the Springfield Republican, an "ad" which would do credit to the largest metropolitan store. True Brothers believe strongly in rotogravure space.

Associated with Mr. Munn is David J. Buckingham, formerly a reporter on the Springfield Union, and the firm is now known as the Munn-Buckingham agency.

In other cities where there is no agency of this nature—and the agency which specializes in small retail accounts is a rarity—there is an unusual opportunity for the newspaper advertising manager and his co-oworkers to "carry on" along the lines suggested in this article. There is a large field for newspaper-trained men with a gift for clear, concise English who would like to build up a clientele on such accounts.

The small space advertisement deserves the respect of all in the newspaper business. Writing it often is an art.

N. Y. AD CLUB RAISING $100,000

All Members Join in Movement to Assure New Home Building

The New York Advertising Club is going right along perfecting plans for a new club building. Since last April, when the membership in a special meeting amended the by-laws sufficiently to empower the board of directors to proceed seriously toward the selection of the best plan which will permit the Club to enter into larger and better headquarters, the building committee has been earnestly at work going over many propositions submitted to it, ranging from projects beyond the club's ability to finance to projects which really are within its means.

The membership, at the same time, has been accumulating a building fund toward the goal of $100,000. Over $35,000 is already at hand and invested in Government securities pending a decision on the new project. This fund is being accumulated on the equitable and convenient method of $8.33 by each resident and non-resident member toward one membership certificate of $100. The club as a corporation must bind its contracts by substantial payment.

"Experience has shown that the construction of similar buildings in other parts of the country, and financing the same, have been worked out by club contributions of around one hundred or hundred and fifty thousand dollars," said Treasurer H. H. Charles to EDITOR & PUBLISHER this week. "Our building committee feels that we can very satisfactorily finance larger headquarters probably involving a total cost of about $500,000, with an aggregate payment from the club of not more than $100,000."

SUN PAPERS EXPANDING

Adjoining Buildings Bought Sextuple Press to Be Installed Shortly

The second floor of the A. S. Abell Company building, formerly occupied as editorial rooms by the Baltimore Sun and Evening Sun, has been remodeled and will be used by the classified advertising and the advertising art departments of the paper.

The buildings adjoining at 9 and 11 West Baltimore street have been bought at a cost of $150,000 and will ultimately be remodelled for the use of the paper.

Work of remodelling the basement has begun, to make room for a new double sextuple press, which will be placed on its foundations in February, giving the paper four double sextuple presses. The foundation for this press is being built so that the fifth press, which it is expected will be needed soon, can be added without difficulty.

of its metropolitan predecessor dispells the possibility of the supremacy of pictures over news.

The future paper, representing true democracy, will be the product of varied personalities. Individuality. He was thinking of the World and its present staff. No, he did not think there ever would be a return to personal journalism. He had been forced to submerge his individuality and personality on one paper. Personal journalism had been buried in the dismal past.

Papers would tend to become more non-partisan. Definite economic, social and political units would lessen their control of editorial policies. The Villard plan of continued stress of ideas and repetition of thoughts in the editorial page is not advisable. It is the paper's duty to express its opinion on the questions of the moment. Had the World continued its appeal for the direct election of the President in 1916 for an extended length of time, a great number of important and vital problems would have been crowded out of the editorial columns.

Clemenceau had said that "newspapers are written by the readers." "That is true of French papers, but not of the American, and there is little chance of it being the case in the future. An unsuccessful journalist is one who tries to please everyone. Was it not a foregone conclusion in 1920 that Harding would be elected? and Hylan in 1921?" We did not support them.

We talked of Broun and F. P. A. and Van Raalte. One of my professors in the School of Journalism had selected Mr. Swope as one of the four great journalists of modern times. He said he would not quarrel with the selection, but thought Joseph Pulitzer's name should certainly be on the list. The Alice of Wonderland way of beginning at the beginning and ending at the end is the best method of writing a news story. Papers will always make mistakes. If science cannot achieve the absolute truth, it is too much to expect editors to attain it. The great task of the reporter is to strip the veneer from the truth.

And then we turned to Nicholas Murray Butler's indictment of present-day journalism. "It elevates superficiality to the plane of an occupation."

"Suppose a mouse should run along here. Perhaps it will only scare some women. Perhaps it will find its way into a hole. Perhaps it will overturn the milk can and start a fire, destroying half the city. Perhaps it will gnaw the rope which entangles the lion. Who knows and who can tell but time? Truth, importance and interest are my replies to Dr. Butler. Few can tell the ephemeral from the permanent. There will always be news that the people want to read and what the people ought to read. The World tries to print both," concluded Mr. Swope.

When we bid good evening, I knew that there was much I had lost. He had talked rapidly and thought rapidly. But I had gained considerable and had learned to know much of a man who was shaping the future of American journalism.

HUNCHES

Managing editor and city editors are always on the lookout for news; and, feature ideas that can be used locally. Editor & Publisher will pay $1 for each hunch published under this head. The fact that the hunch is not being worked successfully in your city does not bar it from thi department. Address your contributions to the Hunch Editor. When they appear, clip them and mail them in and receive payment. Unavailable hunches will not be returned.

EDITORS of the Chicago Herald and Examiner sat in nightly conference over the usual run of big stories several weeks ago. The city editor told of a story he had "doped out" for the next edition—a mongrel dog had been chased by police to the edge of Lake Michigan and had leaped into the water, a suicide, rather than be captured.

"Say, we ought to do something for these plain, ordinary, everyday dogs," came suddenly from the managing editor. "I can't remember when any recognition was given unpedigreed dogs, but they stand for something everyone has a heart interest in."

And so was born the idea that culminated, less than three weeks later, in a huge boy-dog parade down Michigan boulevard, across the Loop and through La Salle street.

The parade was followed by a final show for unpedigreed dogs in which fourteen mongrel champions were selected. Out of the parade and show thousands of Chicagoans who lined the streets and followed to Grant Park got a real thrill that brought back long-gone memories.

Here is how the idea developed:

A reporter was assigned as "dog editor" with instructions to line up the Boys' Brotherhood Republic, a local self-governing body with 800 boy members, and give shows in every section of Chicago. This was done. Merchants of the West, North and South sides, bankers and business men donated the prizes.

Boys of 17 or younger were allowed to enter unpedigreed dogs. They sent in entry blanks printed in issues of the Herald and Examiner.

Before the shows, the boy owners, proud of their pets, flocked to the newspaper studios for pictures. A prize of $25 was offered by the paper for the best 100-word-or-less essay on "Why My Dog Is a Prize Winner." The boy scribes wrote stories that were truly human.

At the preliminary shows first place prizes were given and final contestants selected for the big show downtown. Dogs were judged in such classes as "Best all 'round dog," "Most gentle dog," "Dog with the loudest bark," and "Dog with longest tail."

Mayor Thompson of Chicago proclaimed October 14 oncial Boy-Dog Day and called on all good citizens to honor the unpedigreed dog.

The parade preceding the final showing was the big feature. The Firemen's Band and a detachment of mounted police was at its head.

Small boys with large dogs rode astride a red fire truck; final contestants marched with signs showing the type of dog each owned; a small army of boys followed with their unpedigreed dogs "just to get in the motion pictures."

Despite rain, the fact that the plan was new in Chicago, and various minor difficulties, the event "went across" and cost the Herald and Examiner less than $100.

Worth-while prizes were given in the finals. Boys received radio outfits, cameras, watches, etc. The owner of the "Champion Unpedigreed Dog" received a huge loving cup from the Elks.

The boys worked hard and faithfully. For example, in "Loudest Barking" tests boys were detected giving their pets a surreptitious third degree. They craved noise—and got it in volume.

One of the show judges, Juvenile Judge Victor P. Arnold of Chicago, was sufficiently impressed to issue a statement that "if every boy had a dog there would be little work for my court."—F. E. H.

Spite fences? The officials having charge of the building permits and those receiving complaints regarding health generally know about them, the latter getting complaints about air and sunlight being shut off. In every spite fence there is a human interest story of revenge.—H. D. K.

"Girls! Were you ever deceived by a man?" is a dollar-a-letter contest started by The Chicago Tribune. "How did you catch him at it? Did another girl tell on him and did she have anything to do with it? Did everybody in town hear about it, too? Tell all about it."—H. D. K.

In the olden days the high school students were wont to call St. Patrick's day a non-school day. The habit has fallen off 95 per cent since 1917. Get some high school graduate of the olden days and have him tell of "them days that are gone forever."—W. F. P.

Where'd all those beer bottles get to? Interview your brewers or former brewers.—W. F. P.

Is the water supply in your town low? If so, interview the Mayor and other notables. Get opinions as to whether it might not be better to sell beer, provided the ale is not poisonous.

The English have a new game, "Beaver," which has been quite lately introduced into this country. The game is based on the number of beards you meet, the score being kept as in tennis, and points made by shrieking, "Beaver!" at the first glimpse of a wayfarer thus adorned. The Boston papers think that their fair city will yield more points to contestants than in, probably, any other large American city. Have you many of the fringe decorations in your city? Meantime, the pleasant outdoor sport of spotting the hirsute, which for some months past has kept London on the grin, has reached this country by way, one reads in a New York newspaper, of Canada. Will we have intercity "beaver" matches? Will you back your city for the national championship?—R. M. C.

At Queen's University, one of the three leading universities in Canada, the students are more numerous in the medical department than in any other. The young men are passing up science courses in order to take up a better paying profession. Has the prohibition act anything to do with this?—F. D. V. L.

Is Santa Claus as popular with the kiddies as he was with those children of a generation ago? The opinions of the youngsters themselves would certainly be worth reading. —F. D. V. L.

What do Americanized aliens in your city think of current affairs in their own country? When you get a story from Athens or some other foreign points, get in touch with some local subject of that country and get his or their views. It makes a good sidelight.—B. A. T.

Building and buying of homes is practically constant, but many persons who are desirous and in a position to make a down payment are unaware how to get about it, or that a home can be financed with a small down payment. Explain the various procedures in a story, the data for which can be secured from bankers, loan associations, realtors, etc.—B. A. T.

Who were the great men in your city or town half a century ago? What were their vocations and professions, their physical and mental characteristics, and what was their outstanding achievements for the community?

A search of articles of this nature that has been running in the St. Thomas (Ontario, Canada) Times-Journal makes exceptionally good reading. Authentic information may be obtained from the municipal archives, while that of a more personal nature can be secured from the oldest residents. Brief biographies of some of the great women of the past may also be worked into the series.—L. B. B.

An investigation of courthouse records in an Iowa city and county disclosed that girls are marrying at an earlier age now than heretofore. These records showed that three marriage licenses were issued in one week to couples between 20 and 22 years. Three other couples secured licenses and the brides-to-be gave their ages as only 17 years. In 22 other instances the prospective brides were less than 20 years, but more than 17 years old. Then don't forget the other extreme. A couple got a license in the county in which these records are and the husband-to-be gave his age as 75 years and his prospective bride was 62 years old. Work both extremes and you have a whale of a story.—C. S., Jr.

In Detroit, Mich., there are 1,300 gasoline filling stations, or one station to approximately 7,700 persons. The total number of gallons sold daily is 390,000, at a cost of $82,000 a day, or $30,000,000 a year. How many filling stations in your ctiy? How much money is spent daily and yearly by automobile owners in your city for gasoline? What day particularly is the largest amount of gas sold? Is it on Sundays and holidays?—C. S., Jr.

RESULTS

Mere Quantity

A leading New York Specialty Shop, desirous of information as to which newspapers were most generally read by the class of customers trading at their store, prepared a questionnaire which was circulated to all who could be reached. The definite results were not divulged to us, but we were informed that hereafter the bulk of their advertising would go to The Globe and The ——. These two newspapers were found to lead all others as newspapers read by women customers interested in announcements of this store.

This shop appeals to women of the middle class and above—the greatest purchasing power in any community, and those most responsive to printed advertising appeal. The merchant in question showed the outcome of his investigation to another merchant in another line, with the result that the second merchant is also sold on The Globe and The ——.

To the national advertiser at distant points the buying of advertising is often too largely a matter of mere quantity of circulation or of rate.

The New York Globe's advertising rates, based primarily on cost of production, are fair in comparison with those charged for space in mediums of equal value per unit of circulation.

The Globe invites any prospective advertiser to consult any of its present advertisers.

The Globe takes pride in the fact that its advertisers are pleased customers. It does not merely peddle advertising space. It sells results.

COL. R. R. McCORMICK

THE Chicago Tribune commemorated its seventy-five years of active life by announcing on its birthday, June 10, last, prizes of $100,000 to architects for plans of a new building:

> "—to adorn with a monument of enduring beauty this city, in which the Tribune has prospered so amazingly.
> "—to create a structure which will be an inspiration and a model for generations of newspaper publishers.

The competition was conducted under the rules of the American Institute of Architects and more than 1800 members of that profession from every part of the world responded and designs were submitted by two hundred.

The first prize of $50,000 was awarded for the design submitted by John Mead Howells and Raymond M. Hood, associates, of New York. The story of the achievements of the Tribune as a newspaper are retold in the advance from a room over a grocery store, shown below, to the tower of dignified magnificence at the right.

CAPT. JOSEPH MEDILL PATTERSON

THE new structure will be named the Tribune Tower and will occupy a plot of ground 100x135 feet on North Michigan Boulevard, immediately in front of the present Tribune Plant, shown below.

The second prize award was won by the design submitted by Eliel Saarinen, of Helsingfors, Finland. His associates in preparation were Dwight G. Wallace and Bertell Grenman, of Chicago.

Mr. Saarinen's design, shown at the left, was received during the closing days of the competition and created a sensation. Mr. Saarinen was an entrant in the Hague Peace Palace competition and the winner of the second prize with a design that, like this one submitted to the Tribune, had that touch of northern Europe that gives an architectural individuality.

The winners in the Tribune competition were announced on December 3rd.

Nothing that has ever before been done by a newspaper has attracted wider attention among the lovers of enduring beauty than the unusual method adopted by the Tribune to mark a passing birthday.

TRIBUNE TOWER will rise from the ground to a height of 400 feet. In compliance with the building laws of Chicago, the structure will be occupied to a height of 260 feet. That height comprises twenty-one stories. The rest, 140 feet, is for inspiration, not alone for the men and women who make the Tribune, but for all the builders for a greater future who pass that way.

Only a few years ago the modern downtown building of the Tribune, at the corner of Dearborn and Madison, shown below, was considered a wonder achievement in newspaper building and has been visited by newspaper owners from every part of the world.

Now it is to be pushed aside by this greater structure that is to cost $7,000,000. Several of those millions will be spent for beauty—beauty that typifies progress toward higher ideals.

The third prize of $10,000 was won by the design submitted by William Holabird and Martin Roche of Chicago, and shown at the right.

ALL NATIONS WERE REPRESENTED

EDITOR & PUBLISHER presents these designs with its regular monthly Mechanical Number as service to the many publishers who are constantly seeking exterior beauty as well as interior practicability in the future homes of their dreams, for it must be remembered that this was a contest for beauty and monumental inspiration. The design below was submitted by Louis Lott of Dayton, Ohio.

ASIDE from the three grand prizes, totalling $80,000, ten prizes of $2,000 each were made in allotments to ten recognized American architects, who were invited to enter the competition and who did enter. This was done by the Tribune in order to assure the interest of the foremost American architects. The design shown above were submitted by Kenneth McDonald, Jr., and Maurice Couchot, of San Francisco.

IN STUDYING the design which won the first prize, it will be observed that, using the architectural phrase, the building has been "stepped back" from only one side. This occurs at a height of 200 feet and preserves on the boulevard side and north and south sides the effect of a nearly square tower, lifting its mighty bulk to a height of 400 feet. Below we have the design of Felix Cabarrocas, of Havana, Cuba.

IN STUDYING these designs from many nations, one is struck by the effect that the outstanding architectural structures of each nation has had upon the minds of the men here striving for the greatest beauty possible in modern buildings. There is a touch that makes architecture from each nation differ and it was never better exemplified than in the designs submitted for the Tribune Tower. Above is a design submitted by Louis Bourgeois, Francis E. Dunlap and Charles L. Morgan, of Chicago.

WHILE 140 feet of the prize-winning design has been given over entirely to the Tower of Inspiration it will be noted that the structure has not been treated as a building and a tower—it is not one thing set on top of another. It is a unit and as such will stand as a Gibraltar on this new and growing avenue of commerce. Below we have a design submitted by Thomas J. George, of New York City.

THE Tribune Tower will climb into the air naturally, carrying up its main structural lines, binding them together with an open parapet. Military Gothic is the style of this new home of the Tribune, and it is the general opinion that it has never been better defined. Above we have a design by Otto Hoffman, of Austria.

THE progress of the Chicago Tribune during its seventy-five years is the history of the great Middle West. In it we find the story of the growth of our nation from an uncertain infant to a sure and secure giant. Below we have the design submitted by Edmund S. Campbell, of Chicago.

THE first home of the Tribune was a single room over a grocery store in a building at the south-west corner of Lake and LaSalle streets. The first edition of 400 copies was pulled on a Washington hand press, worked by one of the editors, on June 10, 1847. It's a long journey from that home to the new structure that will grace Michigan Boulevard. Above we have the design submitted by Pierre La Bourgeois, of Nancy, France.

THE population of Chicago when the first Tribune appeared was only 16,000. Joseph Medill, who was later to become its great editor, was still practicing law in Coshocton, Ohio. Joseph K. C. Forrest, James J. Kelly and John E. Wheeler were the Tribune originators. Before the paper was a month old, however, Kelly had withdrawn to enter the more profitable leather business. Above we have the design submitted by Hugh G. Jones, of Montreal, Canada.

THOMAS A. STEWART assumed the editorship in those early days and in that first year the Tribune bought the plant and equipment of the "Gem of the Prairie." Below we have the design submitted by A. Hamilton Scott and John A. W. Grant, of Edinburgh, Scotland.

IN 1851, Whig politicians purchased the share of Mr. Scripps. He and William Bross one year later founded another paper. General William Duane Wilson representing the new ownership was installed as Editor. An evening issue was started but was short-lived. The design below was submitted by Ralph Thomas, Walker & McKenzie, Voorhees & Gmelin, of New York City.

IN 1848 Forrest withdrew from the Tribune and his third interest became the property of John L. Scripps. Two occurrences that year make it a memorable one. On May 22nd, fire destroyed the Tribune property and publication was suspended for two days; December 6th, the Tribune installed the first telegraphic news service in the West. Above we have the design submitted by D. H Burnham & Co., Chicago.

ON JUNE 18, 1855, Joseph Medill secured a third interest in the Tribune property, and Dr. Chas, H. Ray a fourth interest. The name of the purchasing firm then became Wright, Medill & Co. Below we have the design submitted by Joseph Schwartz, of Luxemburg.

THE Tribune was only eight years old when Joseph Medill became the guiding force in it. He was then thirty-two and remained the guiding force for forty-four years, but to the end he had young colleagues. Above we have the design submitted by Charles H. Bebb and Carl F. Gould, of Seattle.

IT IS a notable fact that the spirit of youth has always guided the Tribune and even when the grandsons of Medill took up their work they were not so old as he was when he went West to do his big work in the world. Below we have a design submitted by William T. Gregory and B. R. Saunders, of London, England.

THE Tribune was not Joseph Medill's first venture in journalism. He had successfully established the Cleveland Leader before journeying West, where he met Dr. Ray, and brought to him a letter of introduction from Horace Greeley. It was Greeley who urged this young man to embark in journalism in Chicago. Above we have a design submitted by Andrew N. Rebori, of Chicago.

JOSEPH MEDILL went to Chicago and became editor of the Tribune in 1863, following his purchase of the stock of Dr. Ray. Scripps had left the Tribune two years earlier when he was appointed Postmaster of Chicago by Lincoln. Below we have the design submitted by N. N. Spencer & Son, of Chicago.

IN 1858, the Tribune absorbed the Democratic Press. That brought into the firm Deacon William Bross and John Locke Scripps again. For two years the paper was known as the Press and Tribune, but then reverted to Chicago Tribune. Above we have a design submitted by John Wynkoop, of New York.

THUS it was in 1863, Medill, Cowles and Bross founded the original Tribune family, which grew to include Horace White. This "family" survives today through direct descendants. Below we have the design submitted by George F. Schreiber, of Chicago.

ALFRED COWLES had accompanied Medill from Cleveland to Chicago, where he served the young publishing firm as bookkeeper and was later to buy into the property. Above we have the design submitted by Arthur Frederick Adams, of Kansas City.

OF THE early group that made the Tribune, Medill was a great builder. He believed his a great work, and under his guiding hand the Tribune became a part of the life of the growing city. Below we have the design submitted by Ernesto Fuchs, Guadalajara, Mexico.

ON OCTOBER 8 and 9, 1871, Chicago was swept by fire. The Tribune's credit the day before was said to have been good for more than $100,000. On October 11, the business manager had to borrow $64 from personal friends to buy paper with which to resume publication on October 12. Above we have the design submitted by Lippincott & Billson, of Melbourne, Australia.

ON OCTOBER 9, 1872, the Tribune was again published from its old location, but in a new building. It had survived with others the greatest trial that had befallen an American city. Below we have the design submitted by Lippop, K. Jankowski, of Warsaw, Poland.

"WHAT'S THE NEWS?" were the last words of Joseph Medill, who died March 16, 1899, at San Antonio, Texas. He was succeeded by his son-in-law, R. W. Patterson, who had been acting as general manager of the paper. Above we have the design submitted by Hermann Herter, Zurich, Switzerland.

WILLIAM BROSS' lost active contact with the Tribune while serving as Lieutenant-Governor of the state of Illinois from 1865-1869. It was in the latter year that the Tribune moved from 51 Clarke St., where it had been published for many years, to a four-story building of Joliet marble at Dearborn and Madison. Below we have the design submitted by Olaf Boye, Crawford Jensen, and L. W. Wilhelmsen, of Christiania, Norway.

ALTHOUGH Scripps ceased his active connection with the Tribune in '61, he did not sell his interest until '65, when Horace White purchased it and assumed the editorship. White continued in that capacity until 1874, while Medill gave much of his time to the proceedings of the Illinois Constitutional Convention and as Mayor of Chicago. Above we have the design submitted by Frederick Stuhmke, of Berlin, Germany.

R. W PATTERSON died in 1910. He had been president and editor-in-chief of the Tribune since the death of Joseph Medill. Shortly after, Medill McCormick, now United States Senator and grandson of Joseph Medill, who had been acting as publisher, severed his connection with the newspaper. Below we have the design submitted by James Gamble Rogers, of New York City.

FREE TRADE probably caused the break between Mr. White and Mr. Medill and caused the former to leave the Tribune and placed Mr. Medill in complete charge in 1874, following a tour of Europe. Above we have the design submitted by Bertram G. Goodhue, of New York City.

R. R. McCORMICK, a brother of Medill McCormick, was made treasurer of the Tribune in 1909, and his cousin, J. M. Patterson, was made secretary the same year. In 1914, they assumed complete control as editors and publishers. Below we have the design submitted by Lucian E. Smith, of New York City.

WHILE R. R. McCormick and Joseph Medill, Patterson were absent in military service during the World War, William H. Field was in charge. Today the Tribune is building for the future. Above we have the design submitted by Schmidt, Gordon and Martin, of Chicago.

Essentials of Successful Advertising

"Reader Interest" is one thing;
"Reader Confidence" is another thing

The first may bring extensive circulation, but the second is essential to make that circulation effective from the advertisers' standpoint.

Its approximately 400,000 circulation—about 1,200,000 daily readers— 94 per cent concentrated in Chicago and its suburbs, proves that The Chicago Daily News has "reader interest."

Its year-in and year-out leadership in advertising among Chicago daily newspapers proves that it has circulation effectiveness from the standpoint of advertisers — reader confidence translated into buying action.

In a word all the essentials of successful advertising that can exist in one medium, are found in

THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS

MOST OF IT COMES FROM OUTSIDE

NEW ENGLAND, owing to its density of population, is compelled to buy three-fourths of its food supply from other states.

Today its total population is nearly 7,500,000. This fact, together with the fact that 85 per cent of these are inland population, with more than half of the people living in thirty-six cities, makes one readily see that food campaigns meet with unfailing success in this territory.

The wise food advertiser realizes that NEW ENGLAND is a bigger buyer outside, in proportion to its size, than any similar territory.

It is the most highly organized, densely populated and wealth accumulating section of the country and the well-paid and prosperous industrial workers make it a coveted market.

The NEW ENGLAND market has a stupendous aggregate buying power. This territory offers the greatest market and greatest field for intensive advertising through daily newspapers.

This list of daily NEW ENGLAND newspapers will move every day an enormous volume of merchandise to the consumer, if you will do your part and use adequate advertising space to develop this market.

Plain Dealer	5,490,240	11,154,402
The News	6,815,200	9,327,094

These statistics indicate that The Press carried 1,645,952 more lines of advertising than The Plain Dealer and 3,473,260 more than The News during 1922.

In local advertising alone The Press carried 3,088,792 and 1,763,832 more lines than The Plain Dealer and The News respectively.

These figures point unmistakably to the fact that most advertisers prefer The Press.

$114,881,040 in Building Operations

Philadelphia's

record breaking total for 1922

SHATTER BUILDING RECORDS

Operations Here in 1922 Valued at $114,881,040

The building boom in Philadelphia during 1922 shattered all records of the last decade for construction.

Figures of the Bureau of Building Inspection show that since last January the total number of permits issued was 14,476, covering 22,588 operations, at an estimated value of $114,881,040.

Against this record increase the building during 1921 had a total value of only $42,540,780, for which 12,673 permits were issued, covering 14,651 operations.

The structures built this year included more than 8,800 two-story dwellings, the largest number of residences erected since the war.—(The Philadelphia Bulletin, Dec. 30, 1922.)

With this vast addition to its buildings—and every indication that the big programme will continue in 1923—Philadelphia, the third largest market in the United States, offers greater opportunities than ever before to manufacturers of all kinds of goods.

RANKLIN WAS FIRST OF ALL A HUMAN BEING

rinter, Publisher and Publicist, He Was Distinguished Always For Common Sense—Where Emerson Would Have Hitched Wagon to a Star, Franklin Would Have Looked for New Axle Grease

By JAMES MELVIN LEE

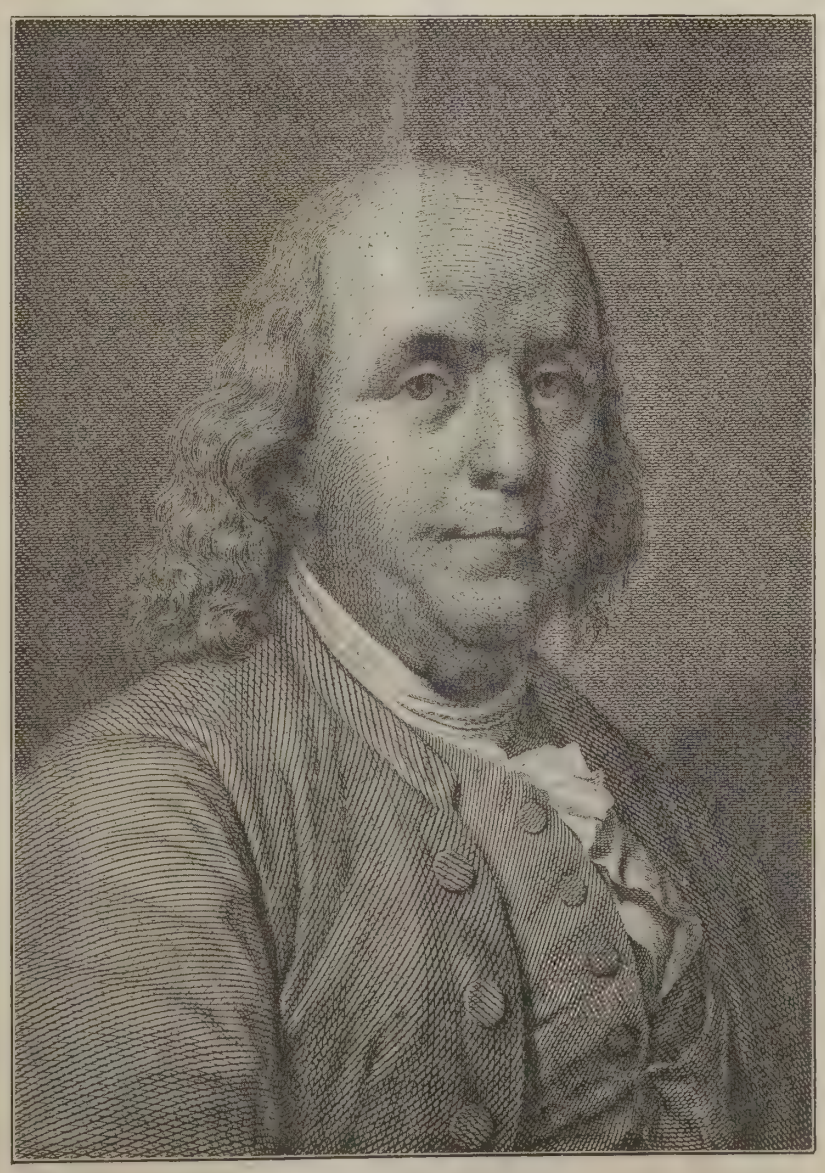
I Colonial times the New Printing Office in Philadelphia was near the rket. It was a small one-story semiached structure with three windows ing the street. A sign just over the es read—B. FRANKLIN, PRINTER. As the watchman made his rounds I nder what he thought as he gazed at s sign dimly visible because of a near- street lamp. What tales the men of a r generation must have told about the rs when as school boys they called at s shop to buy a small slate, primer, or n book. It was at this shop that my y of Philadelphia, fastidious in her te, bought a very fine grade of toilet p, advertised as having been imported m abroad, sold by the proprietor's e, but doubtless manufactured by his her in Boston. To this shop came the siness man to get his ink powder, his d glasses with brass heads, and his vter stand "proper for offices and nting houses." From this shop came sibly the most important newspaper of day, The Pennsylvania Gazette.

But these were the days when men and men danced the minuet. Had this proetor in his knee breeches, as he left his ss to wait upon customers, any mesge for the printers of today? Did he ve any imprint upon American journaln? What kind of man was Benjamin anklin. the printer?

First of all, I want to speak of the little nanac that came from his shop. What luence did it have? Let its publisher ll about it for he knows:

n 1732 I first published my Almanack, ler the name of Richard Saunders: it was ntinued by me about twenty-five years, comnly called Poor Richard's Almanack. I envored to make it both entertaining and use; and it accordingly came to be in such dern that I reaped considerable profit from it, ding annually near ten thousand. And obving that it was generally read, scarce any ghborhood in the province being without it, considered it as a proper vehicle for conveyinstruction among the common people, who ght scarcely any other books; I therefore led all the little spaces that occurred between remarkable days in the calendar with verbial sentences, chiefly such as inculcated dustry and frugality as the means of procurf wealth, and thereby securing virtue; it ng more difficult for a man in want to act ays honestly, as, to use here one of those verbs, It is hard for an empty sack to stand right.

The paper for this almanac, Franklin is not too proud to bring to his shop on wheelbarrow. Never did he allow his ide to run ahead of his purse.



Publishers have their troubles with ion labor, as the news columns of EDIR & PUBLISHER have repeatedly told. certain amendment to the Constitution ll attracts considerable attention in the ess. I leave it to the reader to judge ether these words from Franklin when became a journeyman printer in Lonn have a present day message:

At my first admission into this printing-house took to working at press, imagining I felt a nt of the bodily exercise I had been used to America, where press-work is mixed with mposing. I drank only water; the other rkmen, near fifty in number, were great zzlers of beer. On occasion, I carried up l down stairs a large form of types in each nd, when others carried but one in both nds. They wondered to see, from this and veral instances, that the Water-American, as they called me, was stronger than themselves, who drank strong beer.

Watts, after some weeks, desiring to have me in the composing-room, I left the pressmen; a new bien venu or sum for drink, being five shillings, was demanded of me by the compositors. I thought it an imposition, as I had paid below; the master thought so too, and forbade my paying it. I stood out two or three weeks, was accordingly considered as an excommunicate, and had so many little pieces of private mischief done me, by mixing my sorts, transposing my pages, breaking my matter, etc., etc., if I were ever so little out of the room, and all ascribed to the chapel ghost, which they said ever haunted those not regularly admitted, that, notwithstanding the master's protection, I found myself obliged to comply and pay the money, convinced of the folly of being on ill terms with those one is to live with continually.

The ethics of journalism is today a frequent topic of discussion where newspaper men gather. Did the proprietor of this New Printing Office do anything to advance ethical standards of the trade at which he worked? Franklin, himself, thus answers this question:

In the conduct of my newspaper, I carefully excluded all libelling and personal abuse, which is of late years become so disgraceful to our country. Whenever I was solicited to insert anything of that kind, and the writers pleaded, as they generally did, the liberty of the press, and that a newspaper was like a stage-coach, in which any one who would pay had a right to a place, my answer was, that I would print the piece separately if desired, and the author might have as many copies as he pleased to distribute himself, but that I would not take upon me to spread his detraction; and that, having contracted with my subscribers to furnish them with what might be either useful or entertaining, I could not fill their papers with private altercation, in which they had no concern, without doing them manifest injustice. Now, many of our printers make no scruple of gratifying the malice of individuals by false accusations of the fairest characters among ourselves, augmenting animosity even to the producing of duels; and are, moreover, so indiscreet as to print scurrilous reflections on the government of neighboring states, and even on the conduct of our best national allies, which may be attended with the most pernicious consequences. These things I mention as a caution to young printers, and that they may be encouraged not to pollute their presses and disgrace their profession by such infamous practices, but refuse steadily, as they may see by my example that such a course of conduct will not, on the whole, be injurious to their interests.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN

Did Franklin have a competent assistant in his printing office? Of this assistant he says:

We have an English proverb that says, "He that would thrive, must ask his wife." It was lucky for me that I had one as much disposed to industry and frugality as myself. She assisted me cheerfully in my business, folding and stitching pamphlets, tending shop, purchasing old linen rags for the paper makers, etc., etc.

Had Franklin any time for other duties besides those of his office? Did he forget his old mother up in Boston? It is from a letter to her that we learn about his habits:

I read a great deal, ride a little, do a little business for myself, now and then for others, retire when I can, and go into company when I please; so the years roll round, and the last will come, when I would rather have it said He lived usefully, than He died rich.

Because Franklin read a great deal he was probably the best informed man of his time. His editorial comments about the economic questions of the day were the ablest printed in America, but this is a many-sided Franklin in another field of journalism. He was printer, publisher, proprietor and, strange as it may seem, he was cartoonist as well. For his Gazette, he made the first cartoon to appear in an American newspaper. The occasion was a memorable one. The Governor of the New York Colony had issued on December 24, 1753, a call for a meeting in Albany of the British Colonies on June 14, 1754. Rumors of a possible war with France were not without some foundation. The union of the colonies was most desirable. To supplement his editorial appeal, Franklin printed on May 9, 1754, a cartoon which represented a snake cut into eight pieces; each part represented a colony. Under the cartoon Franklin put the caption: "Join or Die."

But the influence of this cartoon was not limited to the Pennsylvania Gazette. It was copied by such contemporaries as the New York Gazette, the Boston News Letter, the Boston Gazette, the New York Mercury, etc. Comments about it were printed in other newspapers. At the time of the Stamp Act it appeared again. It was of Franklin's cartoon thus reprinted, that James Rivington in his New York Gazeteer on August 25, 1774, said:

On the Snake, depicted at the Head of some American News Papers.

Ye Sons of Sedition, how comes it to pass,
That America's typ'd by a SNAKE—in the grass?
Don't you think 'tis a scandalous, saucy reflection,
That merits the soundest, severest Correction,
NEW-ENGLAND'S the Head too;—NEW ENGLAND'S abused;
For the Head of the Serpent we know should be Bruised.

The most important issue of Franklin's Pennsylvania Gazette was that published just before the Stamp Act took effect. The first page is reproduced by way of illustration to tell its own story. On an inside page of this Doom's Day number between mourning lines appeared the following editorial:

We are sorry to be obliged to acquaint our Readers, that as the most UNCONSTITUTIONAL ACT that ever these colonies could have imagined, to wit, The STAMP ACT, is feared to be obligatory upon us, after the First of November ensuing (the FATAL TO-MORROW) the Publishers of this Paper, unable to bear the Burthen, have thought it expedient to stop a while, in order to deliberate, whether any methods can be found to elude the chains forged for them, and escape the insupportable Slavery: which, it is hoped, from just Representations now made against that Act, may be effected. Meanwhile, we must earnestly request every Individual of our Subscribers, many of whom have been long behind hand that they would immediately discharge their respective Arrears, that we may be able not only to suport ourselves during the Interval but be better prepared to proceed again with this Paper, whenever an Opening appears for that Purpose which we hope will be soon.

This issue is remarkable because it is the last one in all probability published under Franklin's imprint. A notice at the top of the third column announces the dissolution of the partnership of Franklin and Hall. Later the Gazette was published by others.

Franklin was interested in many other publications. He bought out a German newspaper in Philadelphia. Learning his trade in the printing office of his brother, James Franklin, publisher of the New England Courant, he had, when his brother had been forbidden to publish the paper, assumed the duties of the publisher, in order to avoid a suspension of the Courant. Benjamin Franklin later assisted James in starting a paper in Rhode Island. He was continually assisting Ben Mecom in starting printing offices. Mecom had married Franklin's favorite sister. Such assistance to his brother and his brother-in-law in starting printing offices shows one of Franklin's best sides for he was continually called upon to render financial assistance to his relatives. Franklin was ever willing to help an apprentice to start in business. In this way he came to have an interest in a string of newspapers so that his influence as a Colonial publisher was by no means limited to the Pennsylvania Gazette.

Franklin, however, was not the founder of the Pennsylvania Gazette. It was started by Samuel Keimer on December 24, 1728, under the longer title, The Universal Instructor in all Arts and Sciences; and Pennsylvania Gazette. When Franklin became connected with the paper with number forty on October 2, 1729, he shortened its title to the Pennsylvania Gazette. In place of reprints from English books and periodicals he put live news items mixed with little comments of his own. Circulation began to increase. In 1744, Franklin took in David Hall as partner. This partnership lasted until the issue shown in the illustration—a period covering eighteen years. During this period the Pennsylvania Gazette became the best edited and certainly the most successful financially of all Colonial newspapers published at that time in America. The Gazette, which later had the distinction of being the oldest newspaper in the United States, put out its last issue on October 11, 1815. Its plant was sold and its press and its type found their way to the various printing offices in Philadelphia.

Franklin's achievements, after he retired from active journalism, are too well known to deserve even passing mention. Economist, scientist, philanthropist, statesman, though he was, he continued to think of himself first as a printer. His epitaph, which he wrote himself, clearly indicates how he wished to be regarded by future generations:

The Body of Benjamin Franklin, Printer,
(Like the cover of an old Book,
Its contents worn out,
And stript of its lettering and gilding)
Lies here, food for worms.

Yet the work itself shall not be lost,
For it will (as he believed) appear once more
In a new
And more beautiful edition,
Corrected and amended
By its Author.

Because Franklin is so often referred to as an atheist and an agnostic, I want to conclude with Franklin's motion for prayers in the Constitutional Convention of 1787:

Mr. President,—The small progress we have made, after four or five weeks' close attendance, and continual reasonings with each other, our different sentiments on almost every question, several of the last producing as many noes as ayes, is, methinks, a melancholy proof of imperfection of the human understanding. We indeed seem to feel our own want of political wisdom, since we have been running all about in search of it..... In this situation of this assembly, groping, as it were, in the dark to find political truth, and scarce able to distinguish it when presented to us, how has ew York Show Barometer Indicates Most Intensive Selling Industry Has Ever Known—20% Newspaper Space Increase in 1922 Promises to Be Topped by 25% This Year.

NLESS there is a blowup between Turkey and England, which will ke the World War seem like a match npared to the tue of Liberty, cording to ie motor peo- just back m abroad, the rspapers and gazines will ap from the otor industry s year money ough to show a d profit, and e enough left r to redeco- e their struc- es, get new uipment, etc.

JAMES T. SULLIVAN

There will be millions of lines and llions of dollars sent all over the coun- to the papers and magazines. Why? cause 1923 is going to be the most osperous year the manufacturers have own. It is a far different story this nuary from a year ago, and two years o. Then the makers were "trying" to optimistic. It was a difficult task. It not so today. This week's advertising ls its own story of optimism.

Full pages in the papers at show time ve been so rare that the papers did not nsider making any special provision for em. This year they are getting com- on. The Chicago show, starting Janu- 29, will outdo New York, it is ex- cted in this regard. The New York ty papers all showed a gain daily and nday by anywhere from 10 per cent up. d some of the big copy will go rough into smaller cities.

Every big city in the country had an crease of from 10 to 20 per sent, on e average, in the automobile display by the past year. For 1923 judging, what some of the executives say now, ere will be a gain in lineage anywhere om 15 to 30 per cent in newspaper, or actically 50 per cent covering two ars—a good evidence that the country s come back.

Even though some 2,500,000 vehicles ere turned out in 1922—a new produc- on record—there are dealers today roughout the country who are down to e and two cars; some have none; and e majority have not enough of the osed models that so many people are nting after. Last year the dealers re- sed to stock up on cars, and when the g spring rush came along they were ort. So they got rid of their used rs in good shape, and with the new ies that came along they made money. For the first time in many cities the alers began working out plans for sell- g used cars at a profit. They cut out e wild trading to a big extent. They arned something about business meth- s. The owner of an old car was not le to have one dealer outbid another d get a fictitious price. Stabilizing was e plan.

Then the buying became more general roughout the country until today there e not many bad spots, and such as are ft are not very wide in area. This eans that factories have been able to ntinue along on a good production sis without the executives worrying out slowing up conditions. Nor were ere a lot of drastic cuts to make the inds of the buyers chaotic. In fact me prices are going up.

Entering the 1923 year, with the im- tus of 1922 to carry them along, the akers feel prosperity in the air. They ve an idea that the country will be rried at full speed this year to pre- re for the Presidential 1924 campaign. he idea of trying to sell the public on e idea of not changing the Republican lot will mean a lot for business. The y of slowing down things—to go back the Mark Hanna days and the full dinner pail rainbow when soup kitchens dotted all the big cities—can never be put over again.

So much for general conditions. Then there are the buyers. During the war there was a two-year period of non-production. Then came the cars made of what was on hand, not material the makers would have picked out. The first era kept a lot of buyers off the market. The second condition gave many people cars, which were not 100 per cent right. Then there were the pre-war cars, that have been standing up fairly well, but are fast going into the discard. These all tended to send people out to buy. And the totals ran up and up. Yet the demand was not filled.

Dealers came to New York this week full of confidence. Many of them have decided to stock up this winter. The bankers are not so diffident as they were. Therefore you can go to the makers at the hotels and they will show you a lot of orders that will take care of production at the factories 100 per cent through the Spring. Then the usual Spring demand and show orders everywhere will carry them into Summer. Last year they found there was no August slump, and very little drop in buying at the holiday season.

All this being so, the makers and dealers are going to advertise. The plans have been mapped out for Spring by many of them. And the way they spread out their stories at New York was a revelation. The Sunday papers carried a lot of big copy. Some of it was new. There were very few small advertisements. The absence of accessory copy was noticeable. All week the copy kept pouring in. That the newspapers out of town now look to New York as the barometer was shown by the number of men, and the big advertisements they placed. These newspaper advertisements showed that throughout the country there were substantial gains everywhere in display motor copy. The only slow up was in some of the classified "used car" copy.

That the public will buy cars with greater discrimination means increased advertising appropriations. There is more competition than ever. The older makes must tell their stories, for the newer ones will have a lot to say, and the day of selling solely on prestige has gone.

Go down the list of the organizations, big and little, and one finds the plan generally accepted to use good slices of the 1922 profits in 1923 advertising. They seen to have a freer rein at the present from banking influences checking expenditures.

General Motors has prospective budgets ready for all its lines now. Cadillac will be more generally advertised; Buick, Oldsmobile, Oakland, Chevrolet and G. M. C. truck are going to be found in the papers for the next six months very generally in addition to what may be used in a number of cities at show time.

Just as an illustration of how things develop Chevrolet has a new type copper jacketed motor coming along, for those who want it, and it will mean new copy, additional stuff to tell about it.

Willys Overland will spend a lot of more money this year. It has now acceptances from hundreds of dealers, who have asked for newspaper advertising, and they will use at least 2,500 papers, big and little. If the dealers pile up their acceptances it will mean curtailing on some of the magazine copy. In past years the dealers were not much interested, as a general thing, in newspapers.

Studebaker has a new plan for 1923. Instead of a 50-50 basis, with the dealers getting the copy and picking the papers, the factory is allowing dealers so much per car. The copy will be placed by the factory and all the cost will be billed through the agency. The Spring schedule is now ready and the lineage will run higher than a year ago.

Nash is now ready to follow its plans of starting a consistent schedule month after month once the two National shows are covered. The copy will alternate, with now and then a real message in big space, between the smaller style that has made the name so familiar. And Mr. Nash, having his eye on Lafayette, it means that copy which was missing in 1922 will reappear.

Jordan has not made up his Spring schedule. The ideas are all ready, but Mr. Jordan wishes to imbibe a few newer ones, or generate additional original ones as a result of the show. The Jordan show copy will go into some of the smaller show cities until February ends. Then the regular schedule will get a start, and there will not be much of a letup during the year.

Hudson-Essex has such an appeal, because the two cars fill different classes, that they are continually in the public eye. They ran their copy very big through 1922, and the plans for 1923 call for more copy in large sizes.

Maxwell-Chalmers will go along through 1923 with a schedule somewhat increased over 1922, and, where conditions warrant it, the copy will be more frequent. The new Maxwell, since a year ago, has been a wonderful seller.

Cleveland-Chandler is another of the combinations that have gone over through intensive consistent copy. Instead of sticking to one and two papers in a number of cities, the list will be lengthened out and the schedules will be divided.

Hupmobile, ending a year of wonderful prosperity, is ready with its copy, which, by the way, is so arranged that any dealer may select something to fit any season, and he has it far enough ahead. Therefore, it is not so much a case of new schedules as it is continuity to meet conditions. But it will increase, due to dealers being more prosperous.

Peerless is now swinging into another year under its new regime, and with a car that is being widely talked about, the factory has decided that it is well to do some more newspaper advertising. The factory has had no dealer campaign, following a national plan, but there is talk of some "50-50 copy" now.

Packard will be heard from soon with some copy on a "50-50" basis for dealers. The car being oversold meant a slowdown in advertising, but now it will catch up with orders and go through with new copy.

Pierce-Arrow did some very fine advertising last year for cars and trucks. And the dealers reported a remarkable business everywhere. So the factory will continue the campaign in 1923 on a "50-50" basis.

Gardner is coming bigger than ever and it has a campaign mapped out for several full pages. This may be changed to half-pages, run more frequently.

Marmon went into the papers larger than ever during 1922, and will do the same this year.

Dort, with its new six, had three schedules in 1922, and even though one is just ended now, another will start shortly.

Rickenbacker is now going into the papers with a dealers' campaign, and the car is selling so well the advertising will be accepted by the dealers.

W. C. Durant is breaking into the limelight with something new every month. His Star meant good copy; so did the Durant; the Flint will call for a lot more, and the new Princeton is already being heard from in the papers.

Franklin begins its spring schedule a week from Sunday throughout the country with full-page copy, in addition to what will go into Chicago. It has a large campaign under way. And another schedule will follow later.

The new organization handling the National and a lot of other motor products will put over some big copy when the plans now being completed are all set. The 11-column start at New York showed what the executives had in mind.

Dodge Brothers will continue its plan of using its same size copy month after

Globe	38,487 Lines
Journal	36,665 Lines
Post	34,204 Lines
Mail	27,810 Lines
World	14,969 Lines

No Sunday advertising is included in the above totals, which in several cases exceeded the lineage for the entire show week in 1922.

COAL SHORTAGE OPENS NEW AVENUES TO PRESS FOR PUBLIC SERVICE

Brooklyn Standard Union's Method of Securing Relief for Its Community from Fuel Famine Brings Quick and Satisfactory Results

By JOSEPH J. EARLY

General news editor, Brooklyn Standard Union.

NO more convincing demonstration of the power of publicity could be evidenced than that which brought about the collapse of the recent Brooklyn coal famine. This demonstration, which saved many thousands of Brooklynites from actual distress, was accomplished in one week's intensive publicity. It was the result of the driving genius of R. F. R. Huntsman, publisher of the Brooklyn Standard Union, whose name has been familiar one to readers of EDITOR & PUBLISHER for many years.

R. F. R. HUNTSMAN

The crusade to banish the coal famine was initiated on Saturday, December 30, by the publication of a box appeal to the people of Brooklyn to tell the exact facts about their trouble in securing coal. This appeal, written by Mr. Huntsman, was the result of reports from all the district men connected with the Standard Union that great trouble was experienced in securing coal. These neighborhood reporters informed their office that woman and children were going to the coal yards and bringing away small supplies of coal in baby carriages and wash boilers, while others were visiting the coal offices in droves and making piteous appeals for even a few hundred pounds of coal.

During this time the State Fuel Administrator was issuing statements that the situation was in hand while the local district administrator's office was credited with shutting the doors of the office in the faces of the frantic applicants on the ground that there was no coal.

Recognizing that an emergency existed and that the only hope of securing relief was by a broad campaign of publicity, Mr. Huntsman wrote the following notice which appeared upon the first page of the Standard Union on Saturday, December 30, and Sunday, December 31.

IF YOU ARE WITHOUT COAL WRITE TO THIS NEWSPAPER

If the Fuel Administrators and your coal dealer are doing their full duty you should not be without coal.

You should not be compelled to buy soft coal or substitutes at the cost of anthracite.

Your regular coal dealer ought to be able to supply your needs.

If he refuses to do so, write the facts to The Standard Union.

If you know of others who are in distress, communicate by letter only with this office.

If you have been charged an outrageous price for the delivery of fuel, give names and dates.

The people of Brooklyn are entitled to fuel in sufficient quantities to prevent distress or serious inconvenience.

If you know of others who have received preference over you because of favoritism, or "pull" or the degrading use of money, notify The Standard Union.

This newspaper cannot supply coal to those needing it, but it CAN see to it that those whose duty it is to care for this community shall perform their full duty in this crisis.

Be reasonable, be just and you will be helpful.

Tell us the facts.

Write the word COAL on your envelope.

The response which followed indicated that all the reports of distress were more than well founded. By Tuesday several hundred letters had been received and Mr. Huntsman published the following:

THE COAL SITUATION

A deluge of letters has come to The Standard Union from suffering citizens of Brooklyn who have no coal.

While it is physically impossible to even read all of them to-day, every communication will be given fair consideration, and effort will be made to relieve the distress which the letters indicate exists to-day.

Those in authority must answer for the disgraceful situation which confronts Brooklyn in regard to the coal situation.

The following letter, one of the first to be opened, is representative of hundreds of others received from those who are suffering in a community which should be among the first to command respect of those in authority:

515 Sixty-first Street,
Brooklyn.

Brooklyn Standard Union,
Borough of Brooklyn.

Gentlemen: Kindly publish the enclosed letter for the benefit of the public and oblige yours very truly,

JOHN MAHONY.

30th December, 1922.

No coal in a two-family eighteen-room house. Three people sick. Fuel Administrator notified of conditions Dec. 6, Dec. 20, Dec. 22.

What has he been doing doing since?

Coal ordered at Burns Coal Co., Oct. 1, when I purchased the property. Can't even get one ton. Three truck loads delivered in one cellar in December by same company; about 15 tons. Why can't I get one?

Why not look after the wants and welfare of our own citizens first? If the Fuel Administrator wants his paw greased, why doesn't he openly say so? We want coal! Is this so-called Fuel Administrator an American citizen? Will we American citizens have to go to England or Canada to winter, or will we have to freeze to death to make a few more millionaires of fuel grafters? Why talk of race suicide and increasing the good American race, when a few of our so-called leading citizens employ every means of decreasing what we have got?

JOHN MAHONY.

For the next several days more than a page was given over to letters from suffering citizens, who wrote their names and addresses as evidence of good faith. A sample letter is as follows:

NO COAL, BIRTH EXPECTED

TO THE EDITOR OF THE STANDARD UNION:

Would you be kind enough to advise me in regard to coal. I ordered coal from Burns Brothers five months ago. Burns Brothers have furnished me with coal for the past two years. They have promised to fill my order from day to day for the past five months. As my daughter is about to become a mother, would you kindly advise me where I can get some coal?

I will appreciate any interest you may take in the matter. Thanking you, I remain

Respectfully yours,
MRS. J. ABDALLAH,
800 Church Avenue.

Skeptics laughed at the idea that a newspaper could provide coal. They said it was a silly thing to exploit the needs of women and children in a publicity stunt.

If there was a shortage they asked: "How could the Standard Union provide coal?"

"What would happen if all these unfortunate people could not secure any relief?"

But Mr. Huntsman kept up his sledge hammer blows for another day before he answered the skeptics, by effective service for his Brooklyn community. Then he moved in several directions at once.

He sent a member of the Standard Union staff to see the State Fuel Administrator, William H. Woodin, 165 Broadway, Manhattan, and urged the State Administrator to read some of the letters telling the facts concerning the actual distress and asked him if he wanted more proof that a public emergency existed in a community of two million souls.

The representative had an hour's conference with Administrator Woodin and announced at the end that he would turn out the whole force of the State Administration towards relieving the dangerous conditions in Brooklyn. He also agreed to urge the National authorities to rush 72,000 tons of coal to the city of New York to relieve the situation at once. He also promised to investigate every complaint written to the Standard Union and gave Mr. Huntsman authority to publish the following:

WOODIN'S PLEDGE

State Fuel Administrator William H. Woodin today made this pledge to The Standard Union to provide coal to all homes where an emergency exists:

"Every written complaint received from Brooklyn will be investigated immediately. Fully 200 complaints were investigated yesterday in Brooklyn. Report of the conditions found in these cellars will be given to the press tomorrow.

"Every consumer whose condition can be characterized as an emergency will receive some coal within forty-eight hours of the time the verified report on his or her condition reaches this office.

" 'Emergency' means no coal in the cellar, or illness in the family, with the supply of coal so low that two or three days' delay might result disastrously.

"These investigations were made because of the many published complaints coming from Brooklyn. The action of the Fuel Administrator will be guided by the veracity of the statements made in the complaints.

"The Fuel Administrator will continue to investigate complaints from Brooklyn.

"Consumers are urged to complain only when actual necessity requires, because of the amount of work involved in the investigations. Investigations have shown, in many instances, that there is no emergency, and the time spent in going over these useless complaints only takes away from the actual needy ones.

"Where investigation shows that there is coal in the cellar of the complainant that should be in the cellar of a neighbor, the Administration is going to carry out the letter of the law."

Another statement made just as the fight was won, by Mr. Huntsman was as follows:

AN AROUSED BROOKLYN PUBLIC

Wrongs are righted when the people of Brooklyn are thoroughly aroused.

They are aroused now over the disgraceful coal conditions here.

Thousands of Brooklyn homes are without adequate warmth; probably yours is one.

Read what others have written on page three of this issue regarding their struggle to secure fuel.

Their story and your story will arouse such a storm of protest that those in authority and those responsible for suffering and sickness in this community will understand that present conditions will no longer be tolerated in Brooklyn.

Furthermore, the coal grafter, whenever he is found, must answer to the law.

If you cannot secure coal, write the facts to The Standard Union. Let the light of publicity in upon this scandalous and burdensome and un-American state of affairs.

It is unthinkable that this community of more than two million souls may be taken by the throat with impunity, and without punishment for the "hold-ups."

Your protest and the protest of thousands of other decent citizens of Brooklyn will produce results which will astonish you.

If you do not wish your letter published we will respect your wishes; but give us the facts. Truth always prevails.

Before Administrator Woodin announced his willingness to co-operate with the Standard Union another representative was sent to Philadelphia to call upon Judge Edward W. Parker, director of the Anthracite Bureau of Information, with headquarters at 437 Chestnut street, Philadelphia. Judge Parker was the man who signed orders to rush coal here and the appeal was made to him to relieve the distress in Brooklyn. Judge Parker disclaimed responsibility for the coal famine in Brooklyn. He insisted that large quantities of coal had been sent to New York City.

"How do I know there is a shortage in Brooklyn," exclaimed Judge Parker at one stage of the interview. "I have only your word for it."

"Here is the proof," declared the Standard Union representative, displaying two issues of the Standard Union carrying pages of letters from mothers urging relief. "These letters from women tell the story better than I can." Parker spent the next half hour r the letters over and at the end interview promised immediate reli Brooklyn.

One week to a day after the firs lication of the request to the citiz Brooklyn for information the Sta Union was able to publish the pledge State Administrator Woodin guar ing an adequate supply of coa Brooklyn.

The coal famine in Brooklyn an end. Approximately 42 thre four-column cuts were used reproc lines of coal cars on the water fro in out-of-the-way sections of Bro indicating that there was coal in B lyn for immediate needs. All to columns of articles were used to telling the story and reproducing t ters. The final climax came whe Brooklyn Bureau of Charities, one most famous philanthropic organiz in the city of New York, rallied support of the Standard Union w offer to supply coal in small qua to all persons who had no money for it. Thus in seven days by pu a community crisis which threaten lives and comfort of many thousa persons was ended by one of the intensive publicity campaigns ever ducted in the city of New York.

CURTIS CO. EXCLUSIVE AGENCY SYSTEM HELD WITHIN THE LAW

Supreme Court Rules Sheet Did Not Violate Clayton Act in Contracts by Which Dealers Handled Its Magazines and No Others—F. T. C. Can Only Gather Evidence

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 10, 1923.

ENGAGEMENT of competent agents, obligated to devote their time and attention to developing their principal's business to the exclusion of all others, has long been recognized as "proper and unobjectionable," the United States Supreme Court decided this week in overruling the complaint of the Federal Trade Commission against the method pursued by the Curtis Publishing Company in the wholesale distribution of its publications—the Ladies' Home Journal, Saturday Evening Post and Country Gentleman. The technical action of the Supreme Court was to affirm the judgment of the Third Circuit Court of Appeals which had declined to sustain the Trade Commission's complaint and order that the procedure of Curtis Publishing Company constituted "an unfair method of competition."

CYRUS H. K. CURTIS

The principles involved in the court's decisions are far-reaching and have an effect more or less on all business contracts, upholding, as they do, where nothing else is involved, the right of business concerns to execute so-called "exclusive" arrangements with wholesale agents. The clause of the Curtis Publishing Company's contract as finally objected to by the Trade Commission and submitted to the courts, is as follows:

"That without the written consent of the publisher, he (the dealer) will not * * * * act as agent for or supply at wholesale rates any periodicals other than those published by the publisher (the respondent named in the complaint)."

Originally the clause in the Curtis contract objected to by the Trade Commission is its first complaint issued July 5, 1917, was as follows:

"That the district agent hereby covenants and agrees ..... to refrain hereafter from wholesaling to boys or dealers (and from attempting to influence any Curtis agent to sell) any periodicals other than those published by the Curtis Publishing Company..... without first obtaining the approval of the publishers (Curtis Publishing Company)."

Before the testimony had been completed in the first complaint the publishing company altered its contract, but, according to the Federal Trade Commission, retained "a covenant therein identical with that in the contract which was made the subject of the original complaint.

Thus the Commission held that the two clauses quoted above were virtually the same and constituted "unfair competition."

Asserting that the contract complained of by the Federal Trade Commission was one of agency and not of sale, and, therefore, not prohibited by the Clayton act, the court, in an opinion rendered by Justice McReynolds, declared that "the evidence clearly shows that the respondent's agency contracts were made without unlawful motive and in the orderly course of expanding business."

"It does not necessarily follow," continued Justice McReynolds, "because many agents had been general distributors, that their appointment and limitation amounted to unfair trade practice.

"Effective competition requires that traders have large freedom of action when conducting their own affairs. Success alone does not show reprehensible methods, although it may increase or render insuperable the difficulties which rivals must face. The mere selection of competent, successful and exclusive representatives in the orderly course of development can give no just cause for complaint, and when, standing alone, certainly affords no grounds for condemnation under the statute."

The evidence in the case, the court held, did not show that the Curtis Publishing Company "intended to practice unfair methods or unduly suppress competition or to acquire monopoly."

The court divided upon the question of the jurisdiction of the lower courts in acting upon the Commission's findings of fact, Chief Justice Taft and Justice Brandeis dissenting.

The majority opinion referring to the taking of material evidence in the Third Circuit Court of Appeals, which had not been presented by the Commission, and asserting that "the ultimate determination of what constitutes unfair competition is for the court and not for the Commission," held "that the court must inquire whether the Commission's finding of fact are supported by evidence. If so supported, they should be conclusive."

Chief Justice Taft, in behalf of himself and Justice Brandeis, submitted a dissenting opinion expressing "doubt" as to the soundness of that ruling, contending that where it develops "there is not substantial evidence to support additional findings necessary to justify the order of the Commission complained of, the court need not remand the case for further findings." The court, Mr. Taft insisted, did not have power to make itself a fact-finding body. He explained that he registered the "doubt" because he considered it of "high importance" to comply scrupulously with the intention of Congress that the Federal Trade Commission be made the fact-finding body.

The case upon which the ruling was made has been long drawn out. In 1899 the Curtis Publishing Company began the organization of its own distributing agents. Contracts were made to handle Curtis publications exclusively except as in the company's judgment it saw fit to permit the agents to handle other publications. The company's idea was not to prevent an agent from making additional profit providing there was no interference with the company's business.

The contract was enforced to the letter when the Curtis company found that rival organizations were seeking to utilize its selling organization. A competitor company, the Pictorial Review, applied for an injunction in 1917. Judge Hand, in the U. S. District Court in New York, decided that the contention that unfair practices were being pursued were without foundation and the petition for injunction was dismissed.

The Federal Trade Commission then instituted complaint and after lengthy hearings ordered the Curtis Publishing Company to cease and desist from writing and enforcing its contracts. Appeal was taken to the Circuit Court of Appeals and the Commission, overruled, in turn took the case to the Supreme Court.

The contract of the Curtis company, which was the subject of the Commission's original complaint, was worded as follows:

DISTRICT AGENCY AGREEMENT

Form JDA3-a

What The Publishers Will Do.

WITNESSETH, that the Publishers hereby covenant and agree;

1. To appoint the said Party of the Second Part as District Agent for THE SATURDAY EVENING POST, THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL and THE COUNTRY GENTLEMAN, in and for the City of ....., State of ....., for the period hereinafter described, to commence either with THE SATURDAY EVENING POST and THE COUNTRY GENTLEMAN dated ....., 19.., and with THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL for the month of ..... 19.., or with later issues, at the option of the Publishers (this contract must be accompanied by one of the Company's order-blanks stating the number of copies desired of each of these issues):

13. To refrain hereafter from wholesaling to boys or dealers (and from attempting to influence any Curtis agent to sell) any periodicals other than those published by The Curtis Publishing Company, and to refrain from furnishing any other publisher or his agent with the names and addresses of any Curtis agents, without first obtaining the approval of the Publishers.

The following contract with the above formed the basis of the Commission's amended complaint:

AGREEMENT, Dated ....., 19.., between The Curtis Publishing Company (hereinafter called the Publisher) and ..... (hereinafter called the District Agent).

WITNESSETH, That the District Agent is hereby appointed agent for the sale of the following publication of the Publisher, viz.; The Ladies' Home Journal, The Saturday Evening Post and The Country Gentleman for the following territory, viz.;

upon the following terms and conditions:

1. Commencing with the issues of The Saturday Evening Post and The Country Gentleman dated ..... and with The Ladies' Home Journal for the month of..... ....., or with later issues at the Publisher's option, the Publisher will supply and consign to the agent such stock of the above publication as the Publisher finds the District Agent requires from time to time, provided the requisitions therefor are sent by the District Agent according to the schedule issued by the Publisher, at times sufficiently in advance of publication to effect the proper delivery thereof, and provided such requisitions specifying the desired number of copies of each publication are sent upon the printed requisition blanks of the Publisher, and provided the District Agent has faithfully and punctually kept, up to the time of each requisition, the terms and conditions of this agreement. The title of said publications shall remain with the Publisher until they are sold by the District Agent. The said publications are to be forwarded by the Publisher to the District Agent (transportation charges prepaid) by mail, express or freight, at the option of the Publisher, at times intended to effect delivery to the District Agent one day before the authorized publication dates as fixed from time to time by the Publisher.

2. The District Agent will supply to boys and dealers copies of The Saturday Evening Post and of the Country Gentleman at the net wholesale rate of three (3c.) a copy for sale at five cents (5c.) a copy, and copies of The Ladies' Home Journal at eleven cents (11c.) a copy for sale at fifteen cents (15c.) a copy, and will make deliveries of each of the said publications early in the morning of the authorized publication day thereof. All retail sales made by the District Agent shall be only at the prices of five cents (5c.) a copy for The Saturday Evening Post and for The Country Gentleman and fifteen cents (15c) a copy for The Ladies' Home Journal. All sales must be for cash or at the risk of the District Agent.

3. The District Agent agrees that he will at his own expense provide a suitable place and appliances for the sale and the distribution of the said publications; that he will use all reasonable efforts and devote the necessary time for promoting the sale of said publications and supplying the demand therefor; that without the written consent of the Publisher he will not display, deliver or sell any copies of any one of said publications before the authorized publication date as specified in the printed requisition blanks, or dispose of any copies of said publication in the territory of any other District Agent or Special Agent of the Publisher, or act as agent for or supply at wholesale rates any periodicals other than those published by the Publisher, or directly or indirectly furnish to any other publisher or agent the names and addresses of the persons to whom the Publisher's publications are sold or delivered, or allow any one to stamp, paste or otherwise place on or in any of the Publisher's publications or any part thereof any advertising matter, except that he may stamp his name as agent thereon and may insert circulars intended solely to increase the single-copy sale of the said publications.

4. The District Agent shall, subject to the direction and the control of the Publisher, train, instruct and supervise such adequate force of boys within his district as has been or shall be organized by or under the instructions of the Publisher for the purpose of distributing the said publications.

P. S. Collins, general business manager of the Curtis Publishing Company, pointed out to EDITOR & PUBLISHER that the doubt expressed by Chief Justice Taft and Justice Brandeis, "is not on the merits of the case itself, but as to the phraseology of one sentence in the majority opinion because of its possible interpretation and its general application."

The dissenting opinion by Chief Justice Taft, referred to by Mr. Collins, in full as follows:

"The sentence in the majority opinion which makes me express doubt, is that discussing my duty of the Court in reviewing the action of the Federal Trade Commission when it appears that there are material facts not reported by the Commission. The opinion says:

" 'If there be substantial evidence bearing to such facts from which different conclusions reasonably may be drawn, the matter may be and ordinarily, we think, should be remanded to the Commission as the primary fact finding body—with instructions to make additional findings. But, from all the circumstances, it clearly appears that in the interest of justice the controversy shall be decided without delay the Court has full power under the statute so to do.'

"If this means that where it clearly appears that there is no substantial evidence to support additional findings necessary to justify the order of the Commission complained of, the Court need not remand the case for further findings, I concur in it. It is because I bear the construction that the Court has discretion to sum up the evidence pro and con on issues undecided by the Commission and itself the fact finding body, that I venture deference to question its wisdom and correctness. I agree that in the further discussion of the evidence, the reasoning of the opinion of the Court would seem to justify the view that it does not find in the evidence sufficient support additional findings by the Commission justifying its order. I only register this doubt because I think it of high importance that we should scrupulously comply with the manifest intention of Congress that the Federal Trade Commission be made the fact finding body, and that the Court should in its rulings respect the Board's character as such and not substitute its views of the facts where there is room for conflict in the evidence.

"I am authorized to say that Mr. Justice Brandeis concurs with me in this."

'UNT ADVERTISING TIED UP WITH DAILY SPACE IS MOXIE METHOD

OWDS stopped to stare.

Something out of the ordinary ·ly was happening in the little western Pennsylvania city. Even people in automobiles slowed down to have a look at the strange sight.

ANK M. ARCHER

It was the queerest kind of a horse which had ever entered the city.

A large, white, lifelike thoroughbred, saddled and bridled, stood out from the midst of the eddying group of ogling ıfolk. Upon the animal, which a :r examination showed to be of wood, mounted the driver.

or many years a beautiful wooden te horse stood in a Boston harness saddle store. Mr. Archer had admired it for a long time. One morning there was a for sale sign on it. Mr. Archer sent an associate with instructions to purchase it at any cost. Much to his surprise, he was able to get it for $35. He had it mounted on an automobile chassis by his assistants. He was warned it was freakish and foolish and would hurt Moxie.

The very day the Moxie Horsemobile came into existence, a film company took pictures which it sent all over the world. The odd vehicle, advertising Moxie, in seven years has been through 14 states and back. It has been made the subject of countless newspaper advertisements. And it has completely demonstrated whether or not stunt advertising pays, at least for the Moxie Company. A patent was granted Mr. Archer by the government for it.

"We regard as the first essential the making of an honest product," Mr. Archer said when interviewed for EDITOR & PUBLISHER. "Next we place honest treatment of workers, whom we never call help but who are Moxie associates, jobbers, dealers and the public. After that, we place advertising.

"Of all forms of advertising, we consider that in newspapers the best. It is superior to all other forms. We have long since given up direct-mail sales promotion in favor of newspaper space. When we want to get a message over to our 250,000 dealers, we address a letter to them in paid newspaper display space. It is read by them and their clerks, as well. The latter would not see direct-mail matter.

"Through the use of the newspapers, our 700 jobbers also are kept posted on what we are doing to help them make sales. Recently a letter addressed to dealers appeared in 200 newspapers. It also was read by millions of people and helped sell them Moxie.

"Through newspaper advertising we are able to get over an idea quickly and to capitalize interest in current news happenings. For instance, Doug and Mary Fairbanks came to New England, where one of our plants is located. We tied up with their popularity, which is worth millions, by spending $25,000 in newspaper space while they were there. We were able to show them in a photograph with our famous Moxie boy cutout which appears at all of our dealers' stores and at the Bathing Beauty Show at Nantasket Beach on Saturday afternoon.

"The Moxie Girl must in every way be a fitting companion to the Moxie Boy; must have beautiful eyes, beautiful hair and have unquestionable character and deportment qualifying her to appear in every publicity feature that is consistent for a lady to appear in. The age limit is set at about thirty years, and —qualifications being equal—a business lady would be given preference.

Through newspaper advertising the Moxie Company is able to get over an idea quickly and to capitalize interest in current news happenings. Here are two good examples of copy used.

"Representatives of the Moxie intelligence department will be at Nantasket next Saturday in the endeavor to find Miss Moxie, and moving pictures will be taken of the contestants. As a special souvenir of the occasion 500 bathing caps will be distributed by the Moxie Company.

"THE MOXIE COMPANY"
"By F. M. ARCHER."

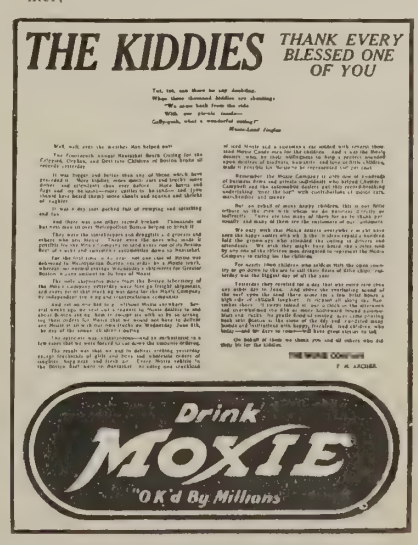
Practically every advertisement is signed by Mr. Archer. Through paid advertising, Mr. Archer was able to tie up with a contest receiving wide newspaper publicity, and be associated with Florence Ziegfeld, the theatrical producer, as judge. Although no advertising signs are allowed at the beach in question, the Moxie Company gave away Moxie bathing caps which fairly dotted the beach without any difficulty. The account has been handled for years by Wood, Putnam & Wood Company, Boston agency.

Each year the company takes off all of its automobiles for a day to convey destitute children to the beach in an outing. It asks all of its dealers to co-operate. The following copy appeared this year:

"On June eighth, we will deliver nothing but truckloads of laughing boys and girls, wholesale orders of gladness and joy, and whatever sunshine and fresh air we may have on hand. All deliveries will be made f. o. b. Nantasket Beach and back again.

"This is the situation: In 1908, the Boston Automobile Retail Dealers' Association organized the first of these annual outings. Like all really good ideas, it has grown and prospered. Founded upon motives of kindness, humanity and the love of little children, the annual children's outing has received each year more and more generous support from the public under the guidance of a great-hearted man—Chester I. Campbell. And since the beginning the Moxie Company has never failed to supply big Moxie trucks, automobiles, attendants and drivers to make this day a happy one for as many children as possible.

"Mr. Campbell tells us that we have more than done our part in carrying the 19,288 children, 2,206 attendants and 3,023 drivers who have taken part in the previous outings. But this year the demands will be greater than ever. Mr. Campbell expects to care for a minimum of 2,406 children. To do this, he has secured the services of 231 attendants and hopes to have a tremendous procession of 650 motor cars and trucks.



"We are going to help him. For this one day we are going to ask Moxie dealers everywhere to humor us and help us give the little boys and girls of Boston, who seldom see the broad ocean and clean sands of the open shore, one big day brimming over with joy. They can do it by merely ordering their supplies of Moxie ahead, so that we will not have to ship a case on June 8th."

The names of Moxie men who will be welfare managers for the trip is given. It is brought out that plenty of Moxie candy and the drink itself will be on hand for all.

This human copy shows up the Moxie business in a light which brings a favorable reaction from the public and the army of dealers as well as from within the circle of employes.

Popular songs might well envy the distribution given to the copyright Moxie song, of which the chorus follows:

"Moxie, oh Moxie, me for you—
I don't know what I could do without you.
As a drink your a hummer, in winter or summer,
There's something so pleasant about you.
Oh, you stand the test, for you are the best;
I'll send all the rest down the line.

ADVERTISING ACTIVITY OF OLD FIRMS BEST SIGN FOR 1923

Co-operative Advertising Promises to See Great Development, with Emphasis on Education Rather Than Building Up Specific Brands

WHILE new advertisers appear to be coming from all sources, but the most encouraging development at the start of the year 1923 is that many old and firmly established concerns are recognizing the necessity of trademarking advertising and merchandising their products in a modern manner.

F. J. Ross

This is the view of F. J. Ross, president of the F. J. Ross Company, of New York, on the advertising outlook for 1923, expressed to EDITOR & PUBLISHER. Besides, Mr. Ross believes the new year will see many former advertisers coming back in activity again and a great development in co-operative advertising. He offers as suggestions for newspaper help to the advertiser and the advertising agent that merchandising service be standardized, if possible, through the efforts of the Bureau of Advertising of the A. N. P. A., and that the practice of giving department stores absurdly low rates, and making up on the national advertiser, be corrected, where possible.

Mr. Ross says:

"The outlook is good. The advertising business, like the steel business, the shoe business, the transportation business, is simply one thread in the whole business or economic fabric. The surest way to read the future of the advertising business, I believe, is to read the general business or economic barometer. This barometer seems to indicate 'fair weather' for 1923.

"When 1923 is past, I think we will be able to call it the most nearly normal year American business has had since before the war. As advertising is part of, and inseparable from the business fabric, advertising should enjoy more nearly normal conditions than for many years past. It takes the same kind of dollars, exactly from the same general sources, to pay advertising bills, as it does to pay steel bills, leather bills, or railroad bills. The man whom we expect to pay advertising bills has to draw his dollars out of the general business fabric. The condition of that fabric, its relation to his business, his relations to his banks, who in turn are inseparable from the business fabric, all determine his ability to make expenditure, whether for advertising or any other needs of his business.

"I have never preached the gospel that the best time to advertise is when business is bad. I don't believe it as a basic principle, and the exceptions simply prove the rule. The best time to advertise is when business is good and purchasing is done freely. It is easiest then to divert to your product more than a normal share of the business it would probably get.

"1921 and the spring of 1922 were very hard times with the rank and file of business concerns, whether advertisers or non-advertisers. Red ink figures were a 'bug bear.' Few business men expected that the last nine months of 1922 would show the degree of recovery which we have all been so glad to see.

"Many concerns that have advertised in the past, or want to begin advertising, have halted their advertising plans in order to restore first the financial soundness of their companies. Many also have not been fully convinced of the permanence of this year's return to prosperity and have been cautious. With most of the important economic factors indicating fair weather ahead, confidence is gaining, while balance sheets are being restored to balance.

"The trends of advertising for 1923, I believe, while undoubtedly numerous, come down to three that are principal—

"The most important of those will be the trend of former advertisers to get back on to an adequate advertising basis.

"The next most important trend will be that of old companies and new that will for the first time adopt advertising as a policy.

"The third most important trend will be the development of co-operative advertising.

"The last trend is due not so much to economic conditions as it is to what many industries have learned about the value of co-operative advertising. They have learned this by studying the few notable examples of success in this field of advertising. In the last few years much pioneering has been done in the field of co-operative advertising. Some of these pioneer industries have passed out of the pioneer stage and are settling down to co-operative policies which they have proved to be money-making policies.

"Appropriations for 1923 are in a great many cases being increased, due to returning confidence and to the improved financial condition of the advertiser. All advertisers accept the principle that there is plenty more business for them to get if they will go after it. It costs money to go after business. There is usually a considerable interval between the time when a company goes after new fields, and the time when those fields are on a profitable basis. Therefore, the interval is distinctly a period of investment of capital, without return for such company. Only their shortness of money or the cost of getting money deterred many companies in 1922 from going after new fields.

"The argument we are using in selling our plans for next year are based as nearly as we are capable of stating them on lessons learned from economic conditions, past and present, and by the indications for the future, as pointed out by the best minds on economics. In special cases, there are special factors to be considered. New forms of competition are springing up, either in the form of new products seeking to replace old ones, new habits among consumers brought about by such influences as the automobile, the parcel post, and new methods of distribution, as effected for example by the growing chain store business.

"New advertisers appear to be coming from all sources, but the most interesting development that we observe is that of many old and firmly established concerns, that have found it necessary to trade-mark, advertise and merchandise in a modern manner.

"Our opinion of the value of newspaper advertising is very high. The trend toward its greatly increased use is explained by many substantial reasons. For many advertisers, it is distinctly the most flexible medium they can use. It enables them to put their advertising pressure where they have distribution. It also enables them to get a very close tie-up with their dealers.

"The newspapers also is a quick acting medium, and wherever quick action is the paramount consideration, the newspaper has 'invincible claims. The past couple of years have brought conditions wherein for many companies, quick action was indispensable. This condition, I think, is at the bottom of the marked increase in newspaper advertising. It is interesting to note that other forms of local media show the same reactions to fundamental conditions, as does also the direct-by-mail form of advertising.

"You ask how the newspaper can be made more effective for all.

"I have two suggestions—

"A small proportion of newspapers conduct highly efficient merchandising departments. A large proportion of newspapers appear to be going through the motions of conducting such a department merely to meet competition, but without putting heart or brains into such work.

"If the newspaper publishers find that the operating of such departments is sound policy, then I believe that the rank and file of newspapers should adopt such a policy and carry it out earnestly. I believe that the A. N. P. A., through one of its organizations—probably the Bureau of Advertising—should take steps which would lead to the standardizing of merchandising service, educate such papers as do not render this service efficiently now, how to do so.

"My other suggestion I am not so hopeful of. The practice of the newspaper in giving to the department store, a rate out of all proportion, results in the foreign advertiser standing the gaff. For instance, when a newspaper will sell to a department store at 6 cents a line, the same space it sells to the foreign advertiser at 30 cents a line, it is either selling the first at a heavy loss, or the second at an unfair profit.

"There is a point at which the cost of white space stops. At some point above that, the rate to the department store should be fixed. Rates on smaller quantities of space used by foreign advertisers, or small local advertisers, should be fixed according to a logical scale. These ratse should then be held the same to practically all classes of advertisers and regardless of whether they are local or foreign advertisers.

"The discrepancy between local and foreign rates is both unsound and unfair. The advertiser who buys through his agency, or if he chooses, buys direct, pays a higher rate to most papers than he does if he gets his local dealer to buy the space for him. This system does no good whatever to anybody concerned and works many hardships.

"Returning to the department store matter, the excessive lowness of the rate which the store secures, leads it to an excessive use of space which in many newspapers makes it difficult for the foreign advertiser, who pays two, three, and four times as much per line to get a showing for his advertisement.

"This general subject will be very hard to remedy, but it is worth the effort, and if the effort be made, it can be remedied. Some distinguished newspapers have already proved that it can be done.

"Throughout many industries there are today associations busily engaged in correcting abuses of long standing. Astounding progress has been made in many fields. Concerted and earnest effort in the newspaper field to modernize many business practices within it, would be met with a very warm welcome by thousands of those many advertisers and advertising practitioners on whose money and efforts the 'flow of gold, to the newspapers so heavily depends.

"In saying this, I am not unmindful of much that has already been accomplished for the betterment of advertising and business practices in the newspaper field."

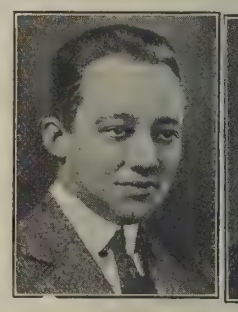
Advertising of the California Fruit Growers' Exchange, which co-operatively markets oranges, grapefruit and lemons under the "Sunkist Brand" trademark, will be increased 60.5 per cent for 1923, forecasting that co-operative advertising will become more widely the rule throughout business, with emphasis on education rather than building up specific brands, according to Paul S. Armstrong, advertising manager of the exchange. "In as far as we are able to judge, and from our experience in buying space and making reservations in various advertising media, it would seem to us that the volume of advertising for 1923 promises to be larger than the year just closing," Mr. Armstrong states.

"In our own case, our appropriation will be 60.5 per cent greater in 1923 than in 1922. This is partly due to a larger crop and partly to an increased assessment per box, which was recently authorized by our board. We believe that this is the general tendency to Pacific Coast food accounts due to a realization that this increased advertising program is necessary to successfully market the commodities which are being produced here in increasing volume each year.

"We think that the business men of the country generally realize that business methods are tightening up, and that the producers or manufacturers who will be successful in the next few years will be those who give close attention to every detail of their business, and particularly to their marketing program, because it is quite evident that in the case of many commodities the production facilities are geared up to a point where it will tax marketing ingenuity to the utmost to dispose of the output even though the buying power of the country remains fairly constant.

"We observe a very definite tendency toward increased advertising of co-operative groups. In this we refer not only to co-operative organizations of producers in agriculture, which in reality are business organizations where each stockholder is a producer rather than merely an investor, and which are operated similarly to the well organized manufacturing businesses, but also to trade and producing groups where the production and sales may be handled by various units operating independently, with the advertising conducted for and under the combined management of the group as a whole.

"Advertising up to this point in the United States has been essentially competitive, its motive being to promote a brand, or to secure business from some other company engaged in producing the same commodity with not much thought given to enlarging the basic market. This to our mind is one of the big things which the co-operative type of advertising has contributed. In our own case, for example, the primary purpose of our advertising is to increase the total consumption—to extend and enlarge the use for the commodity generally with only secondary consideration given to the supremacy of our brand as compared with competitors. Co-operative trade groups, such as we find in lumber, laundry machinery, coffee, and other industries which are constantly organizing for the promotion of their commodity as a whole, are lending a new power and significance to advertising in our opinion.



"It is in the educational rather than competitive aspect that advertising can be of the greatest service to the country, serving as it does in this use to raise the standard of living, increase the scope and enjoyment of the individual and at the same time build a market for the enlarged productive capacity of which this country is capable."

922 RECORDED GAIN IN PUBLICATIONS

rease Only Five, But It Is First Turn of Tide Since 1916—Greatest Loss Last Year Was Among Country Weeklies

The total number of newspapers and er periodicals in the United States l Canada increased last year as shown the accompanying tables prepared by W. Ayer & Son. The increase was all, being just five publications, but it icates that the tide has begun to turn. ere has been a decrease in each year ce 1916.

The American Newspaper Annual Di- tory for 1917 showed a total of 24,868 olications. Of these 23,387 were in United States, and 1,481 were in nada. This year shows 20,856 in the ited States and 1,502 in Canada.

The high water mark in the United tes was in 1916, when 23,387 publica- ns were counted. In Canada it was in 4, in which year she had 1,557 papers. e decrease in numbers began in each ntry immediately after its entrance the war, and the United States now 2,531 fewer publications than in 1916, decrease of something over ten per t.

The loss in the United States last year only 31 publications, which is in- siderable when compared with 1918, ing which year 1,178 fell by the way- e. Canada, which had lost nearly ten cent of its papers by the end of 1918, gained for several years and is now hin 55 of its highest record.

The class of publication which lost st was the country weeklies.

Weekly papers in the United States in 5 numbered 16,165. Of these about 50 were country weeklies, which this r muster about 2,250 fewer than in 5, a loss of about 16 per cent.

Dailies, in which class there have been nerous consolidations in the past few rs, are 143 less in number than in 5. Most of the other classes have reased, the increase being due, in part, the resumption or replacement of ny trade, class, scientific and technical lications which suspended during the

The reason for the large decline in ntry weeklies are fairly well known. draft, the high cost of materials, opportunities and larger financial re- ns offered by industrial establishments tended to divert the energies of many ntry publishers into other lines of ness, and their newspapers were con- dated with neighbors or simply sus- ded. Whether it will reach its previous ord for a long time is problematical. ore the war many communities had two or more newspapers which frequent- ly had a hard struggle to maintain them- selves. These have been replaced through consolidation by one strong paper mak- ing good returns to its publisher, and any new rival endeavoring to plant itself in such a community would probably find it pretty hard to get a footing.

CHANGES IN READING NEWSPAPER DEAL

McCormick Buys Telegram—Will Consolidate with Herald and Take Afternoon Field—Perry & Jones in Morning

William McCormick, editor and pub- lisher of the Reading (Pa.) Times-Her- ald, on January 6 concluded arrangements whereby he has bought the Telegram por- tion of the News-Times and Telegram, which, it was announced last week, had been acquired by John H. Perry and Richard Lloyd Jones. Under the new arrangement Mr. McCormick will on March 1 consolidate the Telegram with the Herald, which he has owned for over 26 years, and will publish it as the Her- ald-Telegram, an afternoon paper, under his editorship and ownership.

Mr. McCormick made the following statement to EDITOR & PUBLISHER re- garding the new transaction in Reading:

"On Saturday, the day your paper was issued, I made a new announcement in regard to my plans. I found the way open for me to buy the Telegram half of my Herald-Telegram, and thus to hold the evening field. The Perry syndicate had bought the News-Times and the Telegram. It was my intention to take my Herald to a new establishment and to run an evening and a morning Herald. When I found I could get the Telegram, I did so, and then announced that the Herald-Telegram would be my own after March 1, and would be issued under my editorship and ownership. The News- Times, the morning end of the paper, will after March 1 be issued by the Perry- Jones syndicate.

"The general understanding is that the Perry-Jones people will issue a morning and evening paper. This has been changed. They will issue the morning paper and I will issue the evening paper."

Marion Tribune Adds Sunday Paper

The Marion (Ohio) Tribune, an after- noon newspaper, has added a Sunday edition and has changed from Associated Press pony service to A. P. leased wire service.

World Herald Building Show

The Omaha World-Herald has leased the Omaha auditorium for the week of March 12 to 17, inclusive, and will con- duct a building show.

FRANKLIN WAS FIRST OF ALL A HUMAN BEING happened, sir, that we have not hitherto once thought of humbly applying to the Father of Light to illuminate our understanding? In the beginning of the contest with Britain, when we were sensible of danger, we had daily prayers in this room for the Divine protection. Our prayers, sir, were heard,—and they were graciously answered. All of us who were engaged in the struggle must have observed frequent instances of a superintending Providence in our favor. To that kind Providence we owe this happy opportunity of consulting in peace on the means of establishing our future national felicity. And have we now forgotten that powerful friend? or do we imagine we no longer need its assistance? I have lived, sir, a long time, and the longer I live, the more convincing proofs I see of this truth, that God governs in the affairs of men. And if a sparrow cannot fall to the ground without his notice, is it probable that an empire can rise without his aid? .....I therefore beg leave to move—

That henceforth prayers, imploring the assistance of Heaven and its blessings upon our deliberations, be held in this assembly every morning before we proceed to business; and that one or more of the clergy of this city be requested to officiate in that service.

Benjamin Franklin had that rare gift of seeing things clearly and of seeing as a whole. The charge has never been brought against him that he lacked common sense. Emerson would have you hitch your wagon to a star but Franklin would leave his press to find some new kind of axle grease to make the wheels turn more easily. It is barely possible, to say the least, that the last quotation from him has a message for international conferences in order that, with apologies to the Great Book, "The wicked cease their troubling and the weary be at rest."

JOURNALISTS, ADVERTISERS AND PRINTERS HONOR FRANKLIN

THE year 1923 marks the 200th anniversary of the beginning of Benjamin Franklin's career as a newspaper publisher. This year is also the bicentenary of "Poor Richard's" immortal pilgrimage from New England to New York and Philadelphia.

The 217th anniversary of Franklin's birth, January 17, will be celebrated through the United States and in other parts of the world to a larger extent than ever before, particularly by newspaper, printing and advertising organizations.

The most extensive celebrations are planned by New York City and Philadelphia. The center of activity in New York will be at the Franklin statue, on old "Newspaper Row," at the junction of Nassau street, Park Row and Spruce street.

The issue of the New England Courant for February 4th to 11th, 1723, first carried Franklin's name as a publisher. The National Editorial Association, at its 1922 convention at Missoula, Montana, voted to commemorate this event. President John Brimblecom will come to New York from Newton, Mass., and will lay a floral wreath, in the form of a quill pen in an ink well, on the statue as the N. E. A.'s tribute, in accordance with the following resolution:

"Whereas, The year 1923 will mark the 200th anniversary of the active entry into journalism, as publisher of the New England Courant, of Benjamin Franklin, America's most distinguished editor, publisher and printer; and

"Whereas, The journalistic fraternity of America holds in deep appreciation the heritage of Benjamin Franklin's memory and desires whenever possible to pay homage to it; therefore, be it

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this convention of the National Editorial Association that observance of this important anniversary should be made by the newspaper fraternity of America generally; that meetings should be held by state and sectional associations on or about January 17, 1923, the anniversary of his birth, or on about February 4, 1923, the 200th anniversary of the date on which his name first appeared as a publisher;

"Resolved, further, That the attention of the newspaper fraternity be called to the importance and significance of American journalism, these dates to and that it be recommended that on them editorial reference to the life and achievements of Benjamin Franklin be made in all American newspapers and periodicals."

The National Publishers' Association's wreath will be in the form of its official emblem, an eagle opening a book in his claws, the initials N. P. A. being featured. H. N. Swetland of the United Publishers Association, president of the N. P. A., will place this garland.

"Truth," with the initials A. A. C. W., will symbolize the interest of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World.

The Sphinx Club and the American Association of Advertising Agencies will lay wreaths of an advertising character.

A flowered composing rule will be presented by the New York Employing Printers Association. John Clyde Oswald, editor of the American Printer, is chairman of this association's Franklin committee.

The United Typothetae of America and the New York Club of Printing House Craftsmen will likewise show their interest in their "Patron Saint."

The American Library Association and the American Booksellers Association will give book-shaped wreaths, symbolizing: "Franklin Made Books, But Books Made Franklin." Franklin is the father of the circulating library system now in vogue in America.

The National Association of Book Publishers' Wreath will bear the numbers 1723-1923. Major George Haven Putnam will present it.

The exercises are under the auspices of the New York City Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, and will be broadcasted. The exercises will be featured by a pageant illustrating the most notable events in Franklin's life.

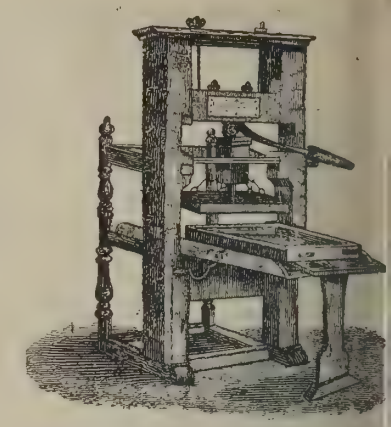
attempt, however, is anywhere being made to have January 17 either a national or state holiday.

The convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World last June in Milwaukee voted to commemorate these two bicentenaries, as well as Franklin's birthday.

All organizations in the A. A. C. W. have received the following message from Earle Pearson, A. A. C. W. educational director:



"We trust you are making plans to observe Franklin's birthday the week of January 17, as suggested in resolutions passed by the convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World at Milwaukee last June.

"Franklin was a printer, publisher, scientist and an engineer. He was a city planner, an inventor, a lover of books. He promoted the establishment of the first public library, was one of the founders of the University of Pennsylvania; he advocated the building of pavements and the lighting of streets at night. He introduced music into the early Colonial homes. He was interested in fire protection. He was an early advocate of life insurance. He was an exhibition swimmer and was said to have been the first American athlete. He was the greatest slogan writer of his day. He made enough money to retire at forty and gave the remainder of a long and busy life to the service of his country, becoming one of the greatest statesmen of all time.

"If you have in your midst a lawyer, editor, doctor, minister, author, publisher, printer, scientist, educator, librarian, statesman, or sucessful business man who has made a study of the life of Franklin, you have material for this special anniversary program.

"Franklin stood for the principles that make for sound sucess in all these lines of endeavor. It is well that we pay tribute to his memory and it will add to our usefulness as business men and as citizens to study these great fundamental teachings, these stabilizers of business that Franklin advocated two centuries ago."

A movement has just been inaugurated in Philadelphia to move and preserve one of Franklin's homes there which would otherwise be torn down to help make way for the new Delaware River bridge. The Poor Richard Club will hold its annual dinner on the evening of January 17 and is also planning to have Franklin's famous epitaph in Franklin's own handwriting, reproduced in bronze, placed on or by Dr. Franklin's grave, Fifth and Arch streets.

Wooden press, once pulled by Franklin

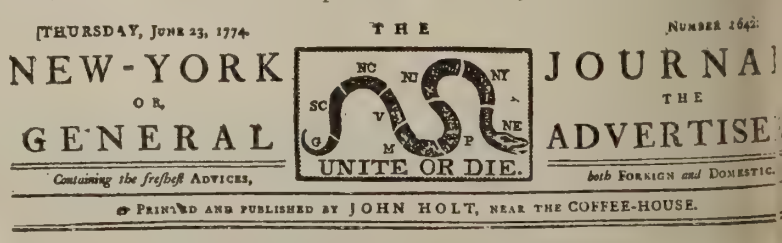
In Philadelphia, the University of Pennsylvania will also hold exercises on the campus.

The Franklin Memorial Movement which had its birth in New York City has already attained international proportions. The Federation of the French Alliances will help show the Franco-American love for Franklin, especially on February 6, the anniversary of the signing in 1778 of the Treaty with France which Franklin consummated.

The Sulgrave Institution, which has done so much for the memory of George Washington, is already doing a lot to honor Franklin. Libraries in many cities will have Franklin exhibitions obeying resolutions adopted by the American Library Association Convention.

According to the Daughters of the American Revolution, however, Franklin's memory deserves most honoring because of "Poor Richard's" unselfish patriotism.

In connection with the Franklin birthday celebration in New York, a movement has been started to erect a memorial to Franklin in Washington, D. C. It was advocated in a resolution adopted by the Sons of the Revolution in the State of New York, December 4, 1922, at their annual meeting.



In Boston, which was the scene of Franklin's early youth and which saw the beginning of his career as a newspaper publisher, the celebration is expected to be similar to the one held in New York City.

A specially designed Franklin Stamp will be issued by the Post Office Department on Franklin's birthday to usher in Thrift Week. Third Assistant Postmaster-General Glover has also announced that a special "Thrift Message" will be sent to all post offices. Franklin will be featured throughout the country by the Department as the first Postmaster General.

Franklin's birthday will be observed in Cincinnati, Ohio, with special ceremonies, at which James M. Cox, editor of the Dayton News, will be the principal speaker.

At Washington, D. C. there will be a program at the Franklin statue on Pennsylvania avenue. Leading patriotic organizations will take part, representatives of the Postoffice Department will honor Franklin as the first Postmaster General. Secretary of the Navy Daniels will be the speaker.

The day will also mark the open-of National Thrift Week, January 17, which, incidentally, will be observed at various points around the world this year. A program is planned at Jerusalem, the Holy City, and in several cities in China. In Honolulu, a city-wide celebration will be held under the auspices of a strong representative committee

RENEW PRINTERS' SCALE IN SAN FRANCISCO

Also in Racine and for Pressmen in Grand Forks—Cut Stereo Pay in Seattle—Raises in Chattanooga

Typographical scales have been renewed in new contracts between newspaper publishers and unions in San Francisco and Racine, Wis. An increase has been granted to the Burlington (Vt.) typographical employes and to pressmen in Chattanooga. Stereotypers' pay was cut in Seattle and several adjustments were made in the Chattanooga stereotype contract. Grand Forks (N. D.) pressmen received an increase. Details of the new contracts follow:

TYPOGRAPHICAL

San Francisco—Contract runs from December 19, 1922, to January 1, 1924, renewing the old scale as follows: Night work, foremen, $60.50; journeymen, $51.50; assistant foremen, $54.50; ad room heads and proofreaders, $54.50; head linotype machinists and machinist-operators, $54.50; day work, foremen, $6 a week less than night scale; other classes, $3 under night scale. Night machine tenders apprentices, $19.55 night, $17.25 day. Apprentices get one-third to two-thirds of journeymen's pay. Machine learns, night work, $20.70 to $38.10; day work, $18.90 to $34.50. Hours remain at 45 hours per week, day or night. A separate local arbitration agreement provides for arbitration of differences on a subsequent contract. Differences under the present contract are to be settled by a joint standing committee and local arbitration.

Racine, Wis.—Contract effective from October 1, 1922, to September 30, 1923, renewing the scale of $45 for night work and $42.50 for day work. Apprentices receive from $17 to $38.25. The 48-hour week stands. A separate arbitration contract provides for arbitration of all differences, including those relative to a new contract.

Burlington, Vt.—Contract effective from December 31, 1922, to December 31, 1925, raising wages $1 from $36 to $37 for night work and from $33.50 to $34.50 for day work. Foremen receive $45, assistant foremen, $43, and Machinists, $37. Apprentices receive one-half to three-fourths of scale.

PRESSMEN

Chattanooga, Tenn.—Agreement effective from November 6, 1922, to September 6, 1925, increasing journeymen's pay from $33 to $35. Apprentices whose pay ranged from $12 to $21 now receive from $15 to $24. Hours remain at 42 for night work and 48 for day work. Local arbitration is provided for all differences.

Grand Forks, N. D—Agreement is effective from December 15, 1922, to December 31, 1925, succeeding arrangement by which old scale continued since expiration of old contract September 1, 1920. The scale renewed follows: Men-in-charge, $43; journeymen, $39.20; helpers, $21 to $30 nights and $18 to $27 days. Local arbitration is provided for all differences. Hours remain at 48 per week.

STEREOTYPERS

Chattanooga, Tenn.—Agreement effective from November 6, 1922, to November 6, 1924, providing a scale of $40 for foremen and $35 for journeymen. The previous scale was $36 for foremen and $30.99 for journeymen. Hours remain at 48. Apprentices now receive $21 to $40. Their pay was formerly fixed by the foreman.

Seattle, Wash.—Agreement effective from June 21, 1922, to December 31, 1923, with a scale for night work of $49.50 and for day work of $46.50, a reduction of $1.50 from the previous scale. The contract provides that if the publishers reduce or increase the typographical scale during the life of the stereotypers' contract, members of the latter union will automatically receive the same pay as the typographical employees. Seven and one-third hours constitute a day's or night's work, the old scale calling for the 44-hour week, day or night.

HORIZONTAL RAISES IN NEW YORK

Job Press Wages Increased to Level of Two Years Ago

The New York job printing industry this week completed adjustment of pressmen's and paper handlers' scales, the following arrangements having been ratified by employers and the unions involved:

Cylinder pressmen (Union No. 51)—$50 a week—increase of $6.

Press assistants and feeders (Union No. 23)—$40.50 weekly to September 1, 1923—increase of $4; $42.50 after September 1, 1923—total increase of $6.

Job pressmen and feeders (Union No. 1)—$40 weekly to September 1, 1923—increase of $4; $43 weekly after September 1, 1923—total increase of $7.

Paper handlers—$34 weekly to September 1, 1923—increase of $3; $35 weekly after September 1, 1923—total increase of $4.

Wages paid to members of these unions were reduced last year as follows:

Cylinder pressmen, $6; press assistants and feeders, $6; job pressmen and feeders, $6; paper handlers, $4.

Compositors wages are and have been on the basis of $50 a week. Two successive arbitrations by the book and job employers have failed to reduce their scale. The cylinder pressmen demanded the restoration of their pre-war advantage in wages over the typographical workers, or a scale of $51 a week, but compromised when the employers offered $6, bringing their scale on a par with that of Typographical Union No. 6. Other press crafts wages followed the rise of the cylinder press pay. The increases average 11 per cent.

I. T. U. "44" Assessment Cut

The International Typographical Union, beginning the first financial week in February, will reduce its assessment for the establishment of the 44-hour week from 5 per cent to 3 per cent. The assessment, levied at 10 per cent in May, 1921, was cut to 7 per cent late that year and to 5 per cent on March 4, 1922. In the December number of the Typographical Journal, it was set forth that 5,684 men were still on strike and that with receipts of $12,493,195.53 since May, 1921, the union had expended on the 44-hour week fight $12,236,874.33. Receipts from this source in November, 1922, were $527,736.58, of which $466,452.04 was expended.

END CONTRACT WITH MAILERS

Louisville Publishers Notify Union Men Will Work as Individuals

Louisville newspapers have notified their mailers that they will not make another contract with local Union No. 16, following failure to agree on renewal of the old contract, which expired October 28, 1922. The union proposal for renewal called for increased wages, shorter working hours, and extension of jurisdiction over other work, and the publishers considered it so drastic as to render negotiations fruitless. Their determination to employ their mailers as individuals solely on ability and to reward meritorious work, while making no change in the wage scale at present, was expressed in the following bulletin, posted last week:

"The contract between Louisville newspapers and Mailers' Union No. 16 expired October 28, 1922. The contract provision for a subsequent period of not to exceed 60 days during which negotiations for a succeeding contract might be carried on has also expired. On October 16, 1922, Mailers' Union No. 16 presented a proposal for a new contract containing provisions for increased wages, and shorter working hours, as well as extension of jurisdiction over other work, the entire proposition being so drastic that in our opinion negotiation was useless.

"We have maintained contractual r for some years with Mailers' Union N Louisville being one of the 30 cities d out of 251 cities in the United Stat ploying other union crafts. Conditions ployment have operated against reward dividual effort or ability, and we have p scale for journeymen to men performi work of unskilled labor.

"From this date our mailing rooms conducted in such manner as will most ensure economy and efficiency. Men employed as individuals solely on their in accordance with our judgment; no f an efficient employ will be dismisse continues to render satisfactory servic it is our desire that all such members mailing forces remain and give us their co-operation. We feel confident those w will find the new conditions more satis than those under which we have been ope For the present the wage scale will changed, but a plan will be worked out will accord recognition to the skill, in and fidelity of the individual employe, principle of employment is not possible Mailers' Union law."

In view of the recent referendum International Typographical Union fa joint strike action with the mailers, d ments in Louisville are awaited with inte

News Is Detroit's Leader In Automotive Advertising

TO reach Detroit, the heart of the automotive industry, automotive advertisers have chosen The Detroit News first and foremost. Local automotive advertisers in particular, because they know the field best, have shown a marked preference for The News. As a result The Detroit News in 1922 published a grand total Daily and Sunday of ,049,314 lines, a lead exceeding

HOLLAND SEES 1923 AS RECORD TRADE YEAR

A. A. C. W. President Optimistic at Joint Washington Meeting of National Commission and Third District Clubs

By Sam Bell

(Washington Correspondent of Editor & Publisher)

Washington, D. C. Jan. 11.—If the advertising prospect of 1923 is fulfilled, the business will set a record for future years to shoot at, L. E. Holland, president of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World told more than 100 advertising men gathered in Washington, Tuesday and Wednesday, for simultaneous conventions of the National Advertising Commission and the Third District of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World.

"We are certainly going to set a new record that will have many years to shoot away at before we ever equal it," asserted Mr. Holland, referring to the outlook for the new year. "That is true particularly for wide-awake illustrative advertisers. Of course that is my line, and for it I am willing to predict a great year."

Mr. Holland and other speakers addressed a joint session of the two organizations Wednesday. Delegates to the meeting of the National Commission voted to receive into the organization representatives of the advertising men of the photo-engraving industry and the Public Utilities Advertising Association, increasing the number of business and industrial groups represented on the commission from 21 to 23.

The upshot of the meeting of the Third District delegates was to perfect a new organization to plan for the District's convention in Atlantic City in June. Officers elected were: F. X. Wholley, Washington, president; P. E. Hotze, Jr., Richmond, treasurer, and Norman Parrott, Baltimore, secretary. Committees were named as follows: Convention, Joseph Schick; program, Howard Cone; publicity, Kemper Cowing, women's committee, Mrs. J. K. Bowman.

The address of Dr. Julius Klein, chief of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce, attracted considerable attention, particularly regarding his views on American advertising abroad.

"A great many foreign magazines carrying American advertising, in fact largely supported by American advertising, are full of anti-American propaganda," said Dr. Klein. "There is a discrepancy here that you and I don't like to see. There should be a better understanding between the offices of the advertising men abroad and the agents of the Department of Commerce regarding the placing of advertising."

Dr. Klein said the great mission of advertising was to convince the consumer that through its use the cost of distribution of commodities could be reduced and more just relations established between production and consumption.

"We don't know enough about the distribution of commodities," continued Dr. Klein. "The cost of selling a product is as much as all of the cost of production and preparation. If advertising can prove it has a definite part in this problem it will become a greater force in the economic life of America than it is now."

Rev. Dr. Christian F. Reisner, president of the Church Advertising Association and an advocate of newspaper advertising for the advance of church work, spoke with great emphasis upon the advantages to be obtained by churches in placing copy with the newspapers.

"I believe the time will come," he said, "when it will be essential that every church or religious sect be drawn into some sort of newspaper advertising."

Bernard J. Mullaney, manager of the Industrial Relations & Publicity Department of the Peoples Gas Light & Coke Company, of Chicago, declared that advertising employed in performing its natural and obvious functions, "is a major economic force." A serious handicap under which advertising struggles as an economic force, he said, was the tendency to "oversell" it. Too often, he asserted, there is disposition to make use of it in fields and enterprises where it cannot possibly win and where its inability to win can be forecast is the problem, is adequately stated.

"Advertising does not perform miracles," he said, "and to give the impression it does, gives it a black eye."

Feminine copy was the subject of a talk by Mrs. Katherine Mahool, vice-president of the Women's Advertising Clubs, and Charles Henry Mackintosh, a member of the National Advertising Commission and formerly president of the Associated Advertising Clubs, addressed himself to direct-mail advertising as a follow-up to retail copy.

Other addresses were made by George W. Hopkins, general sales manager, Columbia Graphophone Company; Herbert S. Houston, publisher of Our World; Edward S. La Bart, director of publicity for Wilson & Co., and E. Allen Frost, general counsel of the Poster Advertising Association.

The advertising exhibit shown at the Milwaukee convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs was brought to Washington intact and displayed at the meetings. A showing also was made of the work of the Department of Commerce in advertising and merchandising.

VIGILANCE BODY TRAILS GIANT OIL SWINDLE

(By Telegraph to Editor & Publisher)

Atlantic City, N. J., Jan. 11.—That a noted Arctic explorer is at the head of an oil promotion company in Texas which by the sale of worthless stock has defrauded the public of approximately $30,000,000 within the past few years, was the official statement made today by the national executive committee of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the world.

The committee, composed of 20 business executives from all parts of the country, representing 50 clubs with a total membership of 25,000 met here to take action vitally affecting the entire organization.

This particularly concerned the activities of the national vigilance committee of the association, formed to combat fraudulent stocks selling operations and other fake schemes involving newspapers and other advertising.

The explorer at the head of the company in question is internationally known, it was declared by Carl Hunt, of New York, manager of the A.A. C. W.

"The company," he said, "is located in Fort Worth, Texas, and was formed by the consolidation of 75 defunct concerns, the capitalization of which aggregates more than $150,000,000. Within two weeks the A. A. C. W. Clubs will issue a printed statement exposing this company and giving the names of the persons backing in it. Criminal prosecution will be made.

The A. A. C. W., by formal resolution, today inaugurated an intensive campaign against all such swindling operations, which, it was declared, have victimized the general public, particularly widows and others dependent upon the income of property and money, to the extent of $600,000,000 within the last year.

"We view with alarm," the motion reads in part, "the fact that the loss reported has grown, in a few years, from $250,000,000 to the present figure, and we recognize that in most cases these frauds live upon the ignorance of people unvoiced in business. And we believe that the failure to curb such operations is a serious contributing cause to public unrest."

The executive committee calls upon Congress, all other legislative bodies and all law-enforcing officials to co-operate and to proceed with greatest vigor to curb this growing menace to the nation. The national vigilance committee, by publication of investigation results, achieved by sending formal signed reports to all newspapers, will also strenuously oppose fraudulent operations.

"We strongly urge all newspapers and other periodicals to open their columns to a full discussion of this situation," the motion concludes, "particularly toward warning the public and commending public officials who do their duty toward the suppression of such operations."

It was pointed out by the committee that many persons who were victimized became bitter toward the state and national government which had failed to protect them and became an easy convert to radical theories.

In line with this effort the executive committee resolved they inaugurate a "peaceful invasion of all religious bodies in order that they may be strengthened in their fight on evil."

All of the associated clubs will give the churches full co-operation as advertising men so as to bring to "all elements of society the gospel of truth and right doing, the spread of moral teachings and the developing of a conscience that shall save the world from misery and ruin caused by selfishness and greed."

The national convention of the A. A. W. will be held in Atlantic City June 3 to 7 inclusive, and there will be an advertising exhibition in connection with it. John Logeman, of Chicago, chairman of the committee in charge, announced that another monster exhibit, twice as large as any previous, would be staged in New York some time during the latter part of the year.

Twenty foreign countries will be represented, said Mr. Logeman, "and we are planning to make this display something that will be long remembered. It will serve to let everyone know what progress has been made in advertising throughout the entire world."

The proposed exposition is designed to emphasize the striking success of advertising by firms which have made fortunes through it, illustrating the methods and policies for the benefit of those who desire, through advertising, to discover and develop their market.

Lou E. Holland, president of the A. A. C. W., presided at the meeting of the executive committee here and spoke each evening in connection with the campaign against fraudulent stock selling, the keynote of the meeting. Edward Schy, head of the vigilance committee and a former U. S. postal inspector, with George W. Hopkins, vice-president of the Columbia Phonograph Company of New York, also addressed the meeting.

A Help to the Advertising Department

The Linotype Typography Layout Kit

The Layout Kit contains 72 loose sheets of typographic material—borders, spots, initials and type matter of many faces and sizes—intended to be cut and pasted up into layouts that show just how the finished ad will look in type.

To the advertiser the Layout Kit is both a convenience and a revelation as to the results that can be secured very economically with Linotype decorative material.

To the newspaper it is practical economy because it furnishes the advertiser a means of laying out his ads in a way that will be exact and readily understood.

There are several ways in which the Newspaper Advertising Department can make use of this idea:

It can use the Kit itself to lay out special ads and design special typographic treatments for its customers.

It can purchase a number of Kits for distribution to its customers.

It can get up its own Layout Kit, showing just the material available in its own plant, and distribute that to its customers.

The Layout Kit is designed solely as a convenience for Linotype users and is sold at the nominal price of $1.00.

Wheaton Held in $20,000 Bail

Edward F. Wheaton, president of the Commerce Advertising Company, 1819 Broadway, New York, was held in $20,000 bail by Magistrate H. Stanley Renaud on January 8 for action of the Grand Jury. Mr. Wheaton is charged with the theft of $2,500 on September 1 last.

CIRCULATION NEWS

R. J. FORD, for the last year in charge of the circulation drive of the Springfield (Mass.) Republican, and formerly with the staffs of the Boston Herald and Springfield (Mass.) Union, is again in charge of the classified advertising department of the Springfield Republican.

Arthur E. Ball, formerly in charge of the classified department of the Springfield (Mass.) Republican, has been transferred to the Holyoke (Mass.) office of that paper.

More than 200 carriers of the Portland Oregon Journal were the guests of that newspaper at a dinner during the holidays. David H. Smith, circulation manager of the Journal, was toastmaster, and the chief address was delivered by George L. Baker, mayor of Portland.

Donna Cona Will Increase Output

The Donna Cona Paper Company, according to dispatches from Montreal dated January 8, has completed financial plans for increasing its newsprint output from 30,000 tons per annum to 60,000 tons. The estimated cost of the new construction is placed at close to $900,000. In the Province of Quebec the company controls 585,440 acres of timber, said to contain approximately 4,250,000 cords of spruce pulpwood. It is understood that the bonds are to be marketed in Canada and the United States.

WITH THE SPECIALS

JOHN J. McCONNELL, who has been manager of the Chicago office of P. McKinney & Son, newspaper representatives, for the last three years, was made a partner in the firm on January 1. He will continue to have charge of the Chicago office.

PERSONAL APPEARANCE IS CLASSIFIED MAN'S SILENT ASSISTANT

Carelessness in Dress a Stone Around His Neck—Los Angeles Herald Issues Publication for Automobile Advertising Department and Increases Rate Twice

By C. L. PERKINS

Executive Secretary National Association Newspaper Classified Managers.

ONE of the truly important factors in superior classified salesmanship is personal appearance. The man who craves to argue the negative of that statement just doesn't realize how good he can be. Dress can be his silent assistant or a stone around his neck.

A salesman may be ever so concise in presentation, clever in discussion, logical in argument, forceful in closing, and still mire in the bog of careless appearance. He may even be the star salesman of his department—but he is only 75 per cent efficient if his manner of dress and habits of personal care are below the proper standard of his job.

Persons of a certain stubborn stamp are fond of saying, Clothes don't make the man. In a sense they are right, but a man's character determines the nature of his attire and conversely his dress indicates his character.

Careless appearance unfailing and positively indicates carelessness as a component characteristic. No confidence is placed where carelessness is known to be.

The carelessly groomed salesman is handicapped from the instant he enters his prospect's presence. His approach is poor, for the prospect has either tagged him as untrustworthy before the introduction, or gives him an attention divided between clothes and classified advertising.

Even when a sale is made in such a case the buyer retains a doubt of his own wisdom and will not remain sold.

He figures that a man who is careless of his own person is careless in his service, and also careless of the truth. The salesman who cannot win and retain the buyer's confidence cannot be good.

Careful appearance, well grooming, mean simply making up for the character played—dressing the part. To overdress—foppishly—is more offensive than careless shabbiness. The salesman's dress and grooming should be so naturally appropriate that they are inconspicuous. Otherwise they detract the prospect's attention from the salestalk.

Clothes may not make the man, but they publish his character for all to read, and they may break him.

THE Los Angeles Herald, C. B. Nissen, classified advertising manager, is now issuing a monthly publication from its classified department, called News of the Row. It is printed on good stock in newspaper style with four columns to a page. The page size is 10½x14, and the number of pages four.

The first page of the first issue contains personal notes about people in the used car automobile business. Page two is devoted to a column of humor, a cartoon, and an article entitled Straight from the Shoulder, by the Want-ad Manager. This deals with the subject of classified automobile copy. This editorial contains a reprint of an article recently published in EDITOR & PUBLISHER, describing the advertising of the Chicago Cadillac Co.

Page three and four contain reproductions of half a dozen promotion advertisements that are to appear in the Herald during the coming month. The value of this promotion is pointed out to the dealers.

Mr. Nissen says: "The object is to show the automobile advertiser the promotion matter that will run the coming month, and give him an idea of what the Evening Herald is doing to promote used car sales through Want-ads. I have tried setting our promotion ads in advance and sending used car dealers proofs of them, but find they simply lay them to one side and forget all about them.

"I thought possibly by getting up a little paper, having my salesmen in auto row pick up a few personal items about the men who place advertising and having it illustrated by a good artist, they would take enough interest in it to save it long enough to get my message.

"Since issuing this first copy I have had many favorable comments and think it will be a good investment."

IN order to prevent advertisers, having blind advertisements, from making needless telephone calls or trips to the office, the Passaic News prints daily at the beginning of its classified columns a list of the box numbers for which there is uncalled-for mail.

THE Los Angeles Herald has issued a new rate card effective January 1st. The new rate is 27 cents per line for one time and graduates down to 17 cents on 26-time insertions. This is the second increase put through by classified manager, C. B. Nissen, in the last seven or eight months, again proving that rates do not determine classified volume.

THE Rockford (Ill.) Register-Gazette termed the week ending January 13 as Classified Week. In a page advertisement promoting it, they give the following as the reason for the special week: "During the year 1922 the Register-Gazette carried 57 per cent more classified advertising than during 1921, an increase of over 325,000 lines. This tremendous growth in want advertising demonstrates the popularity and result-producing power of Register-Gazette dependable Want-ads. We have set aside next week to be known as classified week. And because want advertising is used by everyone, we are asking you to celebrate with us."

During this week the Register-Gazette offered to run all Want-ads placed for three days for six days. In addition to giving six insertions at the price of three a free theater ticket was given to each advertiser paying for his advertisement at the time of insertion or within six days.

Press Palace for Philadelphia Exhibit

The directors of the Sesqui-Centennial Exhibit to be held in Philadelphia in 1926, as recently announced, includes a Palace of the Press, which will not only pictorialize the growth of modern newspapers and periodicals, but also serve as a center for visiting correspondents. In this building the daily paper of the exhibit will have its offices and be published.

*—Where newspapers publish both morning and evening editions, they are credited with whichever edition carried the most advertising.

This achievement, significant of vast equipment, multitudes of workers and millions spent in wages and materials, is a tribute to the policy which THE TIMES has pursued for over two generations:

That since Southern California is inherently a Zone by itself, with sharply-defined boundaries, special climate and many sectional interests and occupations, any Southern California newspaper can best serve both readers and advertisers by focusing its energies on this one wonderful region.

Adherence to this policy has made the LOS ANGELES TIMES the compelling business force in the richest area on earth, winning the corresponding prize, World Leadership in Advertising.

FIGHT FARMER CONTROL IN OKLAHOMA

State Press Association Condemns Arnett Plan as Socialistic—Will Also Make Effort to Revise Libel Laws

(By Telegraph to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

OKLAHOMA CITY, Okla., Jan. 10.—The Arnett plan of newspaper ownership, which is branded as a socialistic idea and not in keeping with good newspaper principles, was condemned and its use rejected by the Oklahoma Press Association at the association's mid-winter meeting here January 5 and 6. Seventy-five state newspaper publishers attended the two-day meeting.

The discussion of the Arnett plan occupied an entire morning session. J. C. Nance, editor of the Marlow Review, presented the plan, led the discussion and suggested the action of the association.

The Arnett plan is a proposal of co-operative newspaper ownership drawn up and sponsored by Eugene Arnett, an Oklahoma insurance man, to give farmers a part in the management of papers published in their communities. Another part of the plan is the publication of a column to be furnished by Arnett. The plan was rejected on the grounds that it smacked too strongly of Socialism.

The Association also condemned the request of former Governor J. B. A. Robertson, whose term expired January 8, that the ninth session of the Oklahoma legislature enact more stringent libel laws. The trend of the session was that the present libel laws already are too drastic as compared with those in other states and that any stricter laws would tend to limit the press in upholding public welfare.

E. S. Bronson, editor of the El Reno American and secretary of the Association; Bert Hodges and Jesse Kerd, were named as members of the legislative committee, with Hodges as chairman.

Elmer V. Jesse of Mangum, president of the Association, instructed the legislative committee to oppose any attempt to suppress free speech and to interfere with the freedom of the press.

W. D. Little, of the Ada News, addressed the Association on "Cut Price Competition." He said the greatest price cutters operated outside the large cities. "In the large cities printers and job work solicitors co-operate in keeping prices at a profitable level. But when the solicitors go into the country towns they apparently accept jobs at any price offered," he said.

The first day, Miss Grace E. Ray, instructor in the School of Journalism at the University of Oklahoma, addressed the editors on "Other Folks' Opinion of Us," in which she outlined the influence of the press in a community.

By a unanimous vote the delegates passed a resolution endorsing John A. Anderson, of Snyder, editor of the Kiowa County Democrat, and former president of the Press Association, for appointment as chairman of the State Board of Affairs under the new administration.

Some of the speakers were: E. M. Evans of the Durant News, Ed. A. Ingram of the Kingfisher Press, Marshall L. Smith of the Hominy Publishing Company, F. A. Garrett of McAlester and Bert Hodges.

Richard Elam of the Pawhuska Capital and the Ardmore Press, E. S. Bronson, E. K. Gaylord of the Daily Oklahoman, James C. Nance, and Elmer V. Jesse were initiated into Sigma Delta Chi honorary journalistic fraternity, after public pledging ceremonies.

The next meeting of the Association will be held in May, when officers will be elected.

State Journal Has $20,000 Fire

The plant and building of the Reno, Nevada, State Journal were damaged by fire on January 4, causing a loss estimated at $20,000. Several employees of the plant narrowly escaped injury due to the rapid spread of the fire. Pending repairs to the building and equipment, the Journal will be published in the plant of the Reno Evening Gazette.

CANADA PAPERS DROP U. S. DIFFERENTIAL

Relic of Time When No U. S. National Advertising Went Across Border Discarded by 20 Ontario Dailies July 1

TORONTO, Ont., Jan. 6.—Twenty daily newspapers in Ontario, Canada, which had retained a differential in commissions paid to United States and Canadian agencies in favor of the latter have decided jointly to abolish that survival of early days when Canadian accounts were infrequent and United States business almost a total stranger. These papers are:

Brantford Expositor.
Brockville Recorder-Times.
Chatham News.
Chatham Planet.
Fort William Times-Journal.
Guelph Herald.
Guelph Mercury.
Kingston British Whig.
Kingston Standard.
Kitchener Record.
Niagara Falls Review.
Owen Sound Sun-Times.
Peterboro Examiner.
Port Arthur News-Chronicle.
St. Catherines Standard.
St. Thomas Times-Journal.
Sault Ste. Marie Star.
Stratford Beacon.
Stratford Herald.
Woodstock Sentinel-Review.

The Windsor Border Cities Star independently took similar action, making its reduced rates of commission and cash discount effective November 1, 1922.

The commission will not exceed 1[illegible] per cent and no publisher will give [illegible] cash discount to exceed 5 per cent on th[illegible] net. The new rate will apply on an[illegible] after July 1, 1923, on all contracts eithe[illegible] new or renewal made after date of thi[illegible] notice. For example; a contract mad[illegible] in January shall earn the existing com[illegible] mission on all advertising inserted befor[illegible] July 1, 1923; after that date the commis[illegible] sion shall be 15 per cent and the cas[illegible] discount not more than 5 per cent on th[illegible] net.

As a matter of policy, the executiv[illegible] committee of the Canadian Daily News[illegible] papers Association has approved a recom[illegible] mendation of the advertising policy com[illegible] mittee that the differential should be abol[illegible] ished and has endorsed the action of On[illegible] tario publishers in establishing a unifor[illegible] rate of commission for all advertisin[illegible] agencies.

Using A. A. C. W. Church Ads

Twelve churches of various denomina[illegible] tions of Elizabeth, N. J., are using i[illegible] paid space, on Saturdays, Series No. [illegible] of advertisements issued by the Churc[illegible] Advertising Department of Associate[illegible] Advertising Clubs of the World. Th[illegible] Council of Churches, Dayton, Ohio, al[illegible] began to use this series the first of Jan[illegible] ary.

Bend Bulletin in New Quarters

The Bend (Ore.) Bulletin recent[illegible] moved into new quarters. The paper [illegible] the same time installed a new press a[illegible] changed from six to seven columns [illegible] the page.

The Ludlow of Today

Gives You All-Slug Make-up

ALL-SLUG forms have many advantages. The typefaces are all new for every job and there is no distribution to follow. By re-casting each line, multiple forms may be had without electrotypes, and a trade shop can sell made up forms out of the shop.

Quick to Make Up—Quick to Make Ready

Bigger units to work with are faster and less subject to error. Slugs do not pi and are easy to justify. They handle like cuts.

All new typefaces make clean, bright forms that are a pleasure to work with. No second hand materials enter into the make-up.

The low quads of Ludlow forms are a striking advantage. They are 12 points lower than printing surface, and cannot smudge.

Quick make-ready on the press comes from all new faces. There are no low or broken letters and general accuracy in height to paper hastens the job.

No pull-outs of letters can occur with an all-slug form—such as the figure 1 from a price of $127 or even $12. This saves embarrassment to advertiser and printer.

Standing forms may be kept a year or more without impoverishing the cases and they will not be found in a pied and picked condition when needed.

Changes for reprints are easily made without any patching of plates. New slugs may be cast and old ones thrown out.

Distribution of used forms is abolished for good. New type on slugs is quicker and cheaper than distribution of old worn types.

NO DISTRIBUTION
"Before the installation of the Ludlow machines I was compelled to employ extra men on Sunday to distribute display type for use on Monday. Since their installation I have done away with this non-productive work."—El Paso (Texas) Herald.

SAVES TROUBLE
"The foreman of our composing room said, the day after Christmas, 'If we had been obliged to use hand set type I guess we would have been in a lot of trouble.'"—Salem (Mass.) Daily News.

OHIO FIRST

The State of Ohio is one of the most fertile trade territories in the United States, 50% of the population is gathered in 21 cities of more than 25,000 each.

Each city has its own home daily newspaper, no other paper will do and no other paper can sell your merchandise in these cities.

Ohio's 1922 crops were the greatest in the history of the state.

Ohio's manufacturing output for 1922 was the greatest in its history.

Prices paid for Ohio's 1922 products were the highest in the history of the State.

Ohio people realize that Ohio-made money should be kept in Ohio as much as possible—and that by spending their own money in their own community they are helping to build their town.

Manufacturers wishing to increase distribution in Ohio find ready and willing co-operation locally, and find that it pays handsomely.

You can get a tremendous leverage for your goods by obtaining the co-operation of these daily newspapers together with the local merchants they serve.

HOOKER OF SPOKANE DIES AT 75

Appendicitis Fatal to Chronicle President—E. T. W. Gillespie of Stamford Advocate and E. S. Crane of Elizabeth Dead

(By Telegraph to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

SPOKANE, Wash., Jan. 10.—On the eve of his 75th birthday anniversary, Thomas Hooker, business manager of the Spokane Chronicle, died last night from an appendicitis operation. He came to Spokane 34 years ago from New Haven, Conn. He had been business manager of the paper 30 years and president of the Spokane Chronicle Company for five years. He was a member of the Associated Press and a former president of the Washington State Press Association.

He was at his office until three days before his death and known as one of the most active business men for his age, an ardent golfer and a sport enthusiast.

Augustus S. Crane, editor and publisher of the Elizabeth (N. J.) Daily Journal, died January 9 at the Overlook Hospital, Summit, N. J., after an illness of seven weeks. He underwent an operation to relieve an inflammation of the liver on New Year's Day. Mr. Crane was born in Elizabeth in 1858. He started newspaper work as a boy, publishing the Jersey Boys' Companion, an amateur monthly.

AUGUSTUS S. CRANE

In 1875 Mr. Crane entered the employ of the then recently established Daily Journal as an office boy at $2.50 a week. Before he was of age Frederick W. Foote, editor and owner of the paper, died, and Mr. Crane became the business manager. A few years later he became its publisher. In 1903 he became president and treasurer of the Journal corporation, which offices he continued to hold until the time of his death. Some years ago Mr. Crane purchased the controlling interest in the Journal. His son, Frederick Lea Crane, is the assistant business manager of the Journal.

Edward Thomas Wright Gillespie, president of Gillespie Brothers, Inc., publishers of the Stamford (Conn.) Daily Advocate and formerly for many years editor of the paper, died January 9. Mr. Gillespie, who was 81 years old, had had several attacks of angina pectoris and suffered an attack last Saturday. Pneumonia later developed. He was born in Ireland in 1841, and came to the United States and settled in Stamford in 1860.

Mr. Gillespie began his connection with the Advocate in 1862, when he assumed the editorial management of the paper. At the time of his death Mr. Gillespie was one of the oldest active newspaper men in Connecticut.

The Hochi's Magnificent New Building Just Completed in the Heart of Tokyo

THE HOCHI SHIMBUN

Japan's Oldest Evening Newspaper
With Large Morning Edition

TOTAL PAID CIRCULATION LARGEST IN TOKYO

The Hochi Shimbun was established in 1872 by the late Marquis Okuma, and continuously since that early date has lent all its influence to the support of its great founder's lofty ideals.

In the foreign news field the Hochi has built up a service which is unexcelled, and which has earned for it many readers who are intensely interested in persons and events abroad. This interest has been found to exert considerable influence on their taste in the purchase of imported commodities and undoubtedly has increased their consumption of products from abroad.

Two-Day Lay-Off in Gary Brings Circulation Increase

The recent fire which swept the plant of Gary (Ind.) Post-Tribune caused no other inconvenience than the loss of about two days' business. Everything in again running along as before. In fact the publishers report: "The two days' partial lay-off demonstrated to a large number of Gary people that it is almost impossible for them to get along without a daily newspaper. Our circulation was higher after the blaze than it was before. Our loss was about $25,000, all of which was covered by insurance."

The Post-Tribune has purchased the Calumet Press, a large commercial printing plant in Gary. However, the two institutions will be run separately with H. Ray Snyder, formerly of the Post-Tribune, as manager. The new owners plan to develop one of the largest printing plants in Northern Indiana.

CITY'S BUILDING COSTS FOR 1922 SHATTER ALL RECORDS

Amount Spent on New Buildings and Repairs Totals $17,462,100, or More Than 25 Per Cent. Over Aggregate for Previous Year. Dwelling Houses Built During Year Valued at $6,649,500, Jump of More Than 100 Per Cent.

From The Evening Bulletin, Providence, R. I., January 3, 1923

This figure breaks all records for a single year's building since the city was incorporated, and represents an increase of more than 25 per cent. over the combined value of construction work for the previous year. On new building alone the increase was much greater.

Dwelling houses head the list of 1922 construction values. The value of dwellings for which permits were issued during the year is placed at $6,649,500, whereas the value of dwellings erected in 1921 was less than one-half that amount.

The 1923 Outlook

for building in Rhode Island is equally promising. With hundreds of new homes constantly being erected and old ones modernized, this market offers excellent opportunities to manufacturers and distributors of building materials, hardware supplies, furniture, electrical, gas and all kinds of household appliances.

This rich field is completely covered by Rhode Island's great newspapers,

LEADING THE LIST

In a city and nation where class circulation means everything, where American advertisers in the ordinary newspaper buy waste circulation among Japanese whose purchasing power is low, The Jiji Shimpo leads all. With a monthly subscription rate of Y1.10, The Jiji is the highest-priced newspaper in Japan.

THE JIJI SHIMPO

Is the newspaper of prosperous, ambitious Japan—a young nation, newly-endowed with means for enjoying the goods of the West. Her most progressive sons and daughters, eager to learn more of America and all America has to give Japan, read The Jiji Shimpo. Not only on account of its superior presentation of domestic and foreign news, but because it carries the bulk of foreign advertising appearing in Japan, The Jiji is the favorite of the class the American advertiser must reach.

The Jiji's New York representative, Mr. J. P. Barry, will gladly discuss the opportunities of the Japanese market, which he has studied at close range.

HAGERSTOWN HERALD-MAIL SOLD

Whipple, Baylor and Hager Retire—Take Control January 17

The Hagerstown (Md.) Morning Herald and Daily Mail have been sold by the trustees of the estate of the late Lewis T. Byron to Lewis T. Byron, Jr., J. Frank Ridenour, J. Vincent Jamison, Jr., Joseph W. Byron, 2nd., William P. Lane, Jr., and Max Von Schlegel. The new owners, who will constitute the new board of directors, will take possession of the papers January 17. All of them are of Hagerstown, except Mr. Von Schlegel, who is publisher of the Martinsburg (W. Va.) Journal.

Major C. E. Whipple, general manager of the papers; C. Neill Baylor, editor of the Herald, and J. Garvin Hager, associate editor of the Mail, have sold their stock to the new owners. It is understood the new board will sell $75,000 worth of preferred stock in the company and acquire the real estate in which the newspaper plants are housed. W. P. Lane, Jr., will be the new president of the company.

This is the second time in the past few years these papers have changed hands. Vernon N. Simmons, former owner of the Herald, sold out to the company headed by Lewis T. Byron, with Messrs. Whipple, Baylor and Hager as shareholders, and about two years ago that company purchased the Daily Mail from the William T. Hamilton estate.

BAN RESIDENCE ADDRESSES

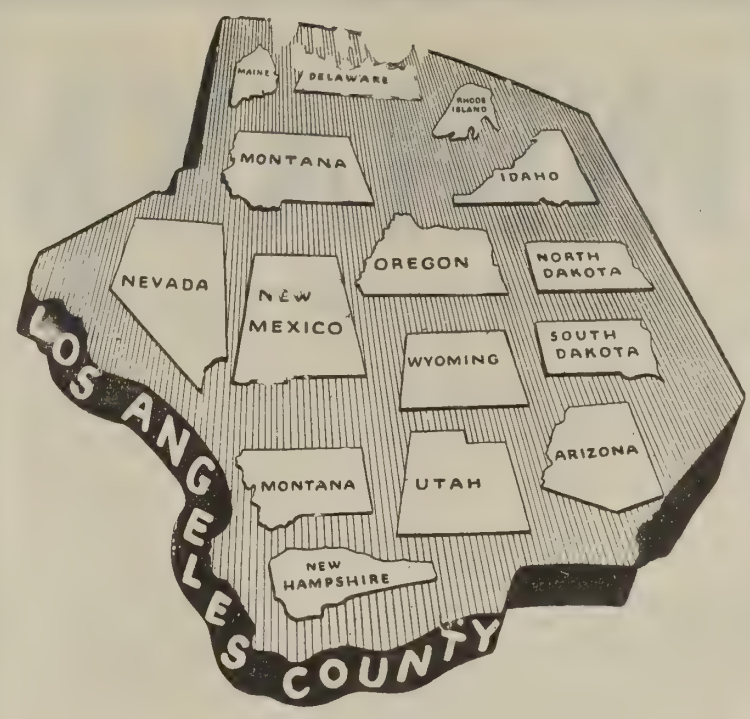
St. Louis Ordinance Hits Dealers Who Use Them in Advertising

St. Louis, Jan. 8.—A new ordinance with respect to advertising now in effect in St. Louis makes it unlawful for dealers to use private residences as a blind in offering merchandise. The practice among certain dealers in St. Louis in the sale of pianos, phonographs, and automobiles especially has been to advertise by giving the address of a residence and declaring that the article is on a forced sale. Many people imagine that such sales provide bargains. The ordinance follows:

ORDINANCE 32093.

"Be it ordained by the City of St. Louis, as follows:

"Section One. It shall be unlawful for any person, firm, partnership, corporation, association, trust, or any employee thereof, engaged in the business of selling goods, wares, merchandise, securities, service or real estate to advertise the sale of the same unless it shall be stated in the advertisement of such sale, clearly and unequivocally, that said person advertising such sale of goods, wares, merchandise, securities, or real estate is a dealer in the same; provided, however, that the advertisement of the sale of any goods, wares, merchandise, securities, service or real estate in such form as to make it plainly apparent therefrom that the person so advertising is actually engaged in the business of selling such goods, wares, merchandise, securities, service or real estate as a business, shall be deemed a sufficient compliance with the terms of this ordinance. Any person violating the provision of this ordinance shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than twenty dollars nor more than five hundred dollars for each offense.



"Approved December 4, 1922."

INDIANA

Gives You a Potential Market Unsurpassed

Any national advertising campaign must include Indiana. It is right in the heart of things—commercially and geographically.

It is a state of good, live towns, only a few miles apart. All leading transcontinental railroads cross its borders with branches to all corners of the State. Over 2,000 miles of electric railroads cover the State.

It offers you the best means of reaching that market—the newspapers of Indiana, all of them substantial, enterprising papers, highly thought of by their readers and advertisers.

This State is productive territory for every National Advertiser and many are depending more and more upon these daily newspapers.

When you buy advertising in the Dailies mentioned below, you deal in known quality and quantity—they are the undisputed leaders in business getting.

NEW YORK LINEAGE A 6 PER CENT GA FOR 1922 OVER 1921

Corrected Figures for 1920 Put That Year a Shade Ahead Last Year's Record of 160,628,884 Lines—December Se New Mark—Total Pages 13 Per Cent Ahead of 1921

TOTAL advertising in New York City newspapers—160,628,884 lines—during the year 1922 set a higher total than any which had previously been recorded, but corrected figures compiled by the New York Evening Post statistical department for the year 1920 place that period's volume at 161,759,369 lines, or seven-tenths of one per cent ahead of last year's record. The gain of 1922 over 1921 was 8,946,119 lines, or approximately 6 per cent. Eleven newspapers showed gains over their 1921 totals, the other six running behind. Eight newspapers finished 1922 ahead of their 1920 totals and nine ran ahead of their 1919 volume.

As expected, December's lineage another new mark for the month, as October and November. The Decer increase of 1,060,028 lines is accou for in part by five Sundays in against four in 1921. The month's was 14,471,986 lines, all but four of seventeen papers listed showing g over the previous December.

With a gain of 6 per cent in lin the total pages used during the yea creased from 144,556 to 164,098, an vance of 13 per cent, slightly below rate of increase during the early mo

ployers and Union Answer Charges y Trade Commission in New York Case, Denying That Body Has Jurisdiction

ASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 10.—Allega- s contained in the complaint of the eral Trade Commission against the to-engraving industry of New York, g the Commission's intention of in- igating an agreement of employers employees to maintain a uniform scale prices for photo-engraving products, denied in answers filed with the mission by the Photo-Engravers' rd of Trade of New York, Inc., and New York Photo-Engravers' Union 1.

oth the organizations assert they are aged in no practice in violation of the which the Commission has been ed upon to administer and contend no agreement has been made be- en them which in any sense is illegal.

pecifically the Photo-Engravers' rd of Trade denies that the work hoto-engravers constitute "products" he sense used by the Trade Commis- or that a substantial portion of the k is transported in interstate com- ce and subject to consideration by the de Commission.

t is denied," says the answer of the loying group, "that the officers, di- ors or members of the said Photo- ravers' Board of Trade of New k, Inc., adopted or maintained a dard scale or uniform price for any ose in conflict with law; said re- dents further state that the so-called dard scale was adopted solely and ex- ively as a basis for computing the of value of the services rendered by members of the Board of Trade to respective customers and as means romoting fair dealing between the bers of the said Board of Trade and respective customers; and that the does not constitute a uniform price ement in fact or in effect, but is simp- nd solely a basis from which the bers of the Board of Trade are ac- med to quote to their respective cus- rs discounts varying with the con- ns surrounding each order."

is further stated that the sole pur- of the agreements entered into from to time by the Board of Trade and New York Photo-Engravers' Union 1 of the International Photo-En- ers' Union of North American "has and is solely to insure proper work- conditions, fair working competition, nonious relations between employer employee * * * that said agree- ts have not been designed or intended any ulterior or illegal purpose what- er, and they have not in any way and never been used for the purpose of ng competition in interstate com- e.

he agreement between the Board of le and the said union has not resulted ne withdrawal of members of the n from the shops or plants of the oyers who are not members of the Board of Trade. In fact a large er of photo-engraving plants have and are in actual operation in the of New York, the owners of which s are not members of the Board of e, and at which plants there are en- d members of the said Union."

ch of the organizations in its indi- al answer acknowledges that a cer- selling base was in operation at one but did not result from any agree- or conspiracy. This so-called base not been operative, however, since h 15, 1921. Discussing the so-called g base from its standpoint the an- of the Photo-Engravers' Union he said selling base was adopted after a most careful and scientific of all the conditions in the trade, upon actual experience of the em- rs and employees engaged in the -engraving industry, and such a sell- ase for photo-engravings was de- clared valid and legal by Mr. Justice Mulqueen of the Court of General Sessions of the City of New York, in criminal prosecution instituted by the District Attorney of the County of New York against the Photo-Engravers' Board of Trade, and it was only after said decision that the union adopted its selling base."

Both organizations maintain that engravings are products of "an agreement for work, labor and services and more in the nature of an art or process," than "an article or commodity of common use."

No date has been fixed by the Trade Commission for a hearing.

SUPREME COURT AGAIN BANS PRICE FIXING

tem went "far beyond the simple refusal to sell goods to persons who will not sell at stated prices," which in the Colgate case was held to be within the legal right of the producer, the system disclosed "necessarily constituting a scheme which restrains the natural flow of commerce and the freedom of competition in the channels of interstate trade, which it has been the purpose of all the anti-trust acts to maintain."

The Beechnut decision reversed the judgment of Federal Circuit Court of Appeals in New York, which had set aside an order of the Federal Trade Commission requiring the Beechnut Company to desist from its methods of reselling its products. The Trade Commission condemned the plans as an unfair method of competition.

Referring to the powers of the Trade Commission the court, in the Beechnut decision said: "If the Beechnut system of merchandising is against public policy because of 'its dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition or to create monopoly,' it is within the power of the commission to make an order forbidding its continuation."

The Supreme Court in the Beechnut case, also, modified, on the ground that it was "too broad," the original order of the Trade Commission, which provided that "the Beechnut company, its officers, directors, agents, servants and employees cease and desist from directly or indirectly recommending, requiring or by any means bringing about the resale of Beechnut products by distributors, whether at wholesale or retail, according to any system of prices fixed or established by respondent and more particularly by any or all of the following means:

"1. Refusing to sell to any such distributors because of their failure to adhere to any such system of resale prices.

"2. Refusing to sell to any such distributors because of their having resold respondents' said products to other distributors who have failed to adhere to any such system of resale prices.

"3. Securing or seeking to secure the co-operation of its distributors in maintaining or enforcing any such system of resale prices.

"4. Carrying out, or causing others to carry out, a resale price maintenance policy by any other means."

The justices dissenting from the majority of the court in the Beechment decision were Holmes, McReynolds, McKenna and Brandeis. Opposing views were read by Justices Holmes and McReynolds, in which the practices of the Beechnut Packing Company were defended and held to be entirely legal. Justice Day delivered the court's opinion in the Beechnut case.

Chief Justice Taft, in announcing the action of the court in the Mishawaka Company's case, said the Solicitor General in his brief conceded that the order of the commission, affirmed by the 7th Circuit Court of Appeals, was broader than the decision in the Beechnut Packing Company case, which the Circuit Court of Appeals followed in dismissing the woolen company's case.

The Mishawaka case has attracted wide attention in the national advertising field during the year as offering another hope that the Supreme Court might legalize in some form the rights of manufacturers to set and maintain the resale and retail prices of their products.

IOWA

Iowa Enjoys the Highest Per Capita of Wealth and the Lowest Percentage of Illiteracy

This condition is permanent because her wealth is based on agriculture.

The approximate value of farm products and live stock produced last year in Iowa amounts to the enormous sum of

$1,750,000,000

Iowa's progressive people are mainly engaged in intensive agricultural pursuits.

The average value per acre of plowed lands is $205.00 There are no congested districts. There are no good sections and ordinary sections. It is all good.

Iowa has never known a crop failure.

This means that money pours into Iowa banks and her people's pockets.

An advertising appropriation, judiciously divided among Iowa's dominating newspapers listed below, can be made to pay a substantial dividend.

OUR SECRETARY OF SECRECY

THE United States Government is a going concern doing business with other nations on a stupendous scale never before reached in the history of the world and this business is being carried on in a manner that is keeping more than a hundred million people—each personally involved, each personally endangered—in complete ignorance of its operations.

Never before has the Department of State shown such contempt for the rights of the people in matters of international intercourse that endanger the future peace and prosperity of this nation and the world. Secret diplomacy—plaything of the devil and agency of war, rapine and greed—rules supreme.

This is not a partisan issue. It is an American issue in which more than a hundred million people are being led around the edge of a volcano as completely uncertain of their steps as if they were blindfolded.

Certainly Secretary Hughes scored the biggest beat of this young year when he recalled the correspondents after they had been dismissed empty-handed from the regular State Department conference to tell them that the Administration had found it expedient to recall American troops from Germany. Only 48 hours before, "high authority" had informed the correspondents that such action was not contemplated, not to be thought of. Yet there is evidence that it had been determined several days before either announcement was made. The newspapers beat the country on the news only by the fact that they had the first chance to be bewildered.

Nor has the corps of correspondents any reason to thank "high authority" for the news it had given the country on America's intention to take a greater interest in world affairs.

The press has told the country what "high authority" has permitted to become known, after days in which endless guesses and hot air stories under Washington date lines had thoroughly confused the people as to the Administration's intentions in foreign affairs.

The press has done its best with the equivocal, double-edged information that has been vouchsafed and it has seen itself denying under banner headlines the very facts that it asseverated the day before. It had been a thoroughly humiliating period for editors and correspondents and the time has come to call for a new deal.

A good way to begin would be by discontinuing the present useless so-called weekly question-and-answer conferences that Secretary Hughes holds with the Washington newspaper corps. They are a waste of busy newspaper men's time and seem to have developed the country's leading false rumor factory. Even the Secretary made this charge at a recent meeting.

America's hands have been kept too clean in international dealing in the past to use them now merely as a screen to whisper behind; the American people are too proud of their principles and ideals to have them whispered—they want them shouted from the house-tops so the whole world can hear.

It might be a high road that Secretary Hughes is traveling, but somewhere on it he is going to need the other hundred million and if he cannot see the necessity of preparing them now with a few facts, then the press of the nation should train the guns of public opinion on him and force the issue.

If necessary, Secretary Hughes must be given to understand that this is a government of all the people even in international affairs.

BUSINESS will applaud the Supreme Court's decision this week that the Curtis magazines violated no law by keeping their sales agents exclusively engaged in their own service. That part of the decision reflected plain common sense applied to a statute whose application has long been in dispute. The decision can be usefully applied by comparatively few commercial organizations, but it served a good purpose in establishing that a firm's relations with its agents, so long as they do not aim at monopoly or restraint of trade, are the concern of nobody but the parties to the contract.

AN AMERICAN'S CREED

COMPILED BY CHAS. W. MILLER
Vicksburg News

IN the days of the Prophets, of the Savior, His Disciples, even to this day, the people have been admonished to give thanks to God for His manifold blessings. In all these years man has known that "every good and every perfect gift comes from the Father of all." Each and every man and woman has a God-given talent; whatever talent we have, is a gift from God. He gives us a brain which is capable of reproducing in our mind's eye a review of all we have passed through from the days of childhood to old age; a brain to conceive the manufacture of divers things; some to cure the physical ailments of man, surgeons who can perform wonderful operations on the human body and every invention that has been made. Then, why not give thanks to Him daily, and exemplify His teachings, to Love thy neighbor as thyself, and show practical kindness in every form of need?

OFF TO A FLYING START

1922 LIVED up to its promise. It set new marks in advertising for the newspaper fighters of 1923, marks that a few years ago would have seemed beyond the wildest dreams of the most optimistic believer in newspaper advertising. Its successor in the procession of the years starts with prospects of equalling, perhaps bettering, the record made during the past twelve months. Business has forgotten the old joke about the necessity of a Hades as a refuge for departed commerce. The uncertainty that marked January of a year ago is totally absent as trade floats along on the crest of a wave of industrial activity that has never been equalled.

Automobile men at the first of the national shows in New York this week look forward to a year in which more cars will be made and sold than was considered possible only a year ago. They also see new makes entering the field for a taste of its prosperity and the severest kind of competition. That bodes well for the newspapers. Competition creates new advertisers, some of whom are bound to prosper and continue using the newspaper to spread their message. Lineage in New York newspapers is far above that during previous exhibitions and there is promise that the regular campaigns to start in the Spring will continue the flood of selling copy in the daily press.

At the take-off, then, 1923 looks like a year which will be marked by general prosperity throughout the nation, free spending, increasing wages and higher prices for the necessities of life. When the peak of this activity will come it would be rash to guess. Normally it might be expected to run through most of the year and to precede a period in which post-war deflation could continue its interrupted course. But with Europe a powder magazine in the vicinity of a bonfire, it is futile to talk of normal business conditions anywhere in the world. American business is putting its best foot forward, hoping for the best and preparing for it and not crossing any bridges of trouble until they appear dead ahead. Probably that is the best way to travel in a world enveloped in fog.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN entered on his newspaper career just 200 years ago, through a printer's apprenticeship. He left the craft half a century later, died a printer, and the craft was much the richer for his association with it. His feet were always on solid ground, his eyes sometimes above the clouds, but his philosophy is rooted deep in the eternal life of the race.

WHO'S SINISTER NOW?

PITY Mr. Steenerson! He shouldn't have stir up the newspaper and periodical publishers allusions to sinister propaganda in their fi for relief from war-time postal burdens. He shoul have trusted to memory alone when he said that U Sam was losing more than $30,000,000 a year on h dling second class matter. Rather should his n have projected itself back to the Spring of 1917 t to the dour jobless Spring of 1922. If it had, Steenerson might not now be called a "sinister pr gandist" and convicted by his own words.

Mr. Steenerson should have recalled the old days when Messrs. Burleson and Kitchin vented t spleen against the press by putting the present rageous scheme of rates on the statute books u cover of a host of war tax measures. In those Mr. Steenerson did NOT believe that the Governm was losing millions on carrying newspapers and ma zines. He DID believe that the Burleson clique using obsolete and lying figures to establish that po charges fell far short of paying costs on carrying lications. Mr. Steenerson didn't hesitate to dec that the Post Office officials didn't know what were talking about. And he clinched all his po

Mr. Steenerson—in 1917, mind you—took 4,000,0 000 pounds of mail as the total carried in the prev year. He declared that the Post Office paid the ways $60,000,000 for carrying this total—roughl cent and a half a pound. With that he placed 1917 statement of Mr. Burleson that the Depart was making a profit of 20 per cent on the pa post, the transport of which cost 3 cents a po Then he took the figure advanced by Burleson, Ki et al. of 5½ cents a pound as the average co handling second-class matter, and showed that it taken from a report of an investigation 10 before 1917. He pointed to the immense reduc in the pay to the railways for transporting mail blue-tag freight shipment of magazines, the mail bags, half as heavy as the 1907 vintage gigantic increase in the volume of mail between and 1917—from 1,200,000,000 pounds to 4,000,00 pounds—and the transfer of much of the handli periodicals from the Post Office to the publishe

His conclusion was that it cost no more to tran periodicals than the parcels post and that it tainly cost less than 2 cents a pound in 1917. comments were that "those gentlemen who for and years advertised to the world that the Goverr was being robbed of $80,000,000 should reflect t is unfair," and that "statements made here as graft of $80,000,000 or $90,000,000 are gross exag tions, unworthy of anybody who makes the stater

That was Mr. Steenerson in 1917. He talked mon sense—in vain—to politicians whose thoug postal matters were befuddled by general ignc and ingrained hatred for the press which sav proclaimed that ignorance. Most of them have been retired from Congress. Unhappily, Mr. St son has fallen into disfavor at home, and it appear, into the habits of thought that mark opponents of six years ago.

Today Mr. Steenerson condemns as "sinister p ganda" the very thoughts, almost the very wor uttered when the present postal charges wer ceived in hate and brought forth in prejudice.

He was right in 1917. He is not right toda is not thinking of the United States now, but Steenerson, out of a job after March 4 unle gods find him another desk in Washington Steenerson can stay in Washington if his posta mission can get a million dollars to investigate class mail until 1924. They've spent two yea $300,000 already and reported "progress."

But the million can't be had if the papers ge they want first and a jobless Congressman w little trifles like pre-election promises or six-y statements bar him from changing his mind new opinion adds a chance of life to the posta mission. The people and the publications can g They will, too, unless they convince the Steen that triple pre-war postal rates can't be used vide million-dollar do-nothing commissions fo gressional cripples and that when the new speak for themselves and their readers, politici parties which don't listen are in for trouble.

Seven Traveling Men

The other Sunday night there were seven traveling men in the Episcopal church of Alpena, Mich., who admitted they had come because of the church's advertisement in the Alpena News.

The publisher obtained the 52 ads offered by the Church Advertising Department and tried to get all the churches to unite in using them. He failed to get them all in line. The Episcopal Church decided to use the series alone.

Now that results are coming, the other churches are "murmuring together."

Every week additional papers engage these ads. Churches Advertisements, Series No. 3. There are 52 pieces of copy about 250 words each. They provide the basis for concrete discussion of an adequate advertising campaign by churches in a town. One London, Eng., paper is using only parts of the ads at the top of its column of religious notices. The St. Cloud, Minn., Times uses the ads in three column eight inch space in good position, space being paid for in turn by local merchants, a different one each week.

Get the ads. Price for use is very low. You can find a way to use them. Address Herbert H. Smith, 518 Witherspoon Bldg., Philadelphia, Pa.

1923 PROMISES NEW RECORD IN AUTO ADVERTISING

month throughout the year all over the country, which is one of the big schedules.

Auburn has been one of the most persistent advertisers, its dealers running repeated first-page advertising, and it will continue.

Reo will be doing more this year than it has for some previous years, and its dealers have been running small copy at their own expense in many cities.

Lexington has decided on a policy of aiding its dealers to a larger extent this year, and its first campaign will follow the show season.

Harry C. Stutz, with a new six, will do a lot more this year than a year ago.

Cole, with its new prices, has inaugurated a campaign now to run through until spring.

Stephens was one of the most consistent advertisers last year, and the results were so good it will be followed by a consistent campaign this year.

Haynes is now working out its spring schedule for dealer co-operation, and it will run for some months.

Paige-Detroit did a lot of advertising due to the new Jewett. And the latter has gone over big. So it will mean larger appropriations for both cars this year.

Velie ended up the year with one of the largest campaigns for a short period 1922 saw. This year the company will spend a lot more money in the newspapers.

R. & V. Knight is going to tell the story of the sleeve valve motor more consistently this year.

Stutz began a campaign early in the year, but it was cut short. This year it will start in again, but continue it along for a lengthy period.

Henry Ford has spent more money in the papers this year, with both the Ford and Lincoln than ever before. And there is another large campaign in the making.

Earl is straightening away with good prospects, and has mapped out a new campaign to be ready shortly.

C. Harold Wills is also getting under way again, and the familiar Grey Goose will reappear in the papers as often as before. Gray was a newcomer with good copy, and now it is going to swing into larger company.

There are a number of new companies coming along that will be added to the list during the year.

And the big tire companies are now ready to break into print because it is inevitable that prices will go up. These, together with the battery advertising, will run the total up more than 25 per cent above 1922.

Apperson, Davis, Westcott, Moon and Dorris are also going to join the colony of those advertising more than a few times annually.

WHAT OUR READERS SAY

Canada to Entice Our Farmers Away!

TULSA, Okla, January 2, 1923.

TO EDITOR & PUBLISHER: I note, from a story sent to American newspapers last Friday night by the Consolidated Press Association, that the Dominion of Canada proposes to initiate at once an extensive advertising and publicity campaign in the United States to induce settlers with some capital to go to Canada.

I suppose this means that American newspapers will be flooded with stories of Canada. These will be written interestingly and a great many newspapers will publish them. I can think of no greater harm that might arise to a number of our western states than by the publication in any considerable number of newspapers of such publicity.

The American farmer is discontended now. It will not take much to cause him to pack up and move to Canada. We don't want to encourage that. American newspapers, particularly those in the western states, and all newspapers in farming communities, should see that their news departments are aware of the danger that lurks in these Canadian stories and should see that the proper orders are passed all down the line.

If this Canadian campaign is like a great many similar ones, most of the money will be spent to pay press agents who will guarantee publication in the news columns of news which is favorable to Canada, and these press agents will make good too, unless American editors are on the alert. Canada has something to sell. She should ADVERTISE.

VICTOR F. BARNETT,
Managing Editor, Tulsa Tribune.

Who Can Verify Origin of These Excerpts?

PITTSBURGH, Pa., January 6, 1923.

TO EDITOR & PUBLISHER: When one sees a notable quotation, attributed to some person of distinction, he is usually inclined to verify its accuracy. Here are three quotations of great interest to the newspaper profession:

"I would rather live in a country with newspapers and without government than in a country with a government but without newspapers."—THOMAS JEFFERSON.

"Four hostile newspapers are more to be dreaded than a hundred thousand bayonets."—NAPOLEON BONAPARTE.

"The newspaper is parent, school, college, pulpit, theater, example, counsellor, all in one. Every drop of our blood is colored by it. Let me make the newspaper and I care not who makes the religion or the laws."—WENDELL PHILLIPS.

I asked one of the public libraries of Pittsburgh if it would take the trouble to verify these excerpts, if possible. In but one instance, that of Jefferson, was the library successful. In a letter to Edward Carrington, written in Paris, January 16, 1787, Jefferson said:

"The basis of our government being the opinion of the people, the very first object should be to keep that right; and were it left to me to decide whether we should have a government without newspapers, or newspapers without a government, I should not hesitate a moment to prefer the latter."

Maybe EDITOR & PUBLISHER itself, or some of its readers or writers, could verify and place the other two quotations, and would print the facts. It would be of real sentimental value to the profession of journalism if this were done. These paragraphs, especially that of Phillips, embody the loftiest idealism as to the sphere and service of newspapers.

J. S. RITENOUR.

The "Country Editor"

MAPLETON, IA., January 6, 1923.

TO EDITOR & PUBLISHER: I was induced to write the article "Keeping History Straight," by Teasdale Randolph, of the Country Editor, with the understanding the magazine was wholly free from all entangling alliances and was not to be an open forum. I am certain after reading EDITOR & PUBLISHER that this cannot be so.

Check in payment of the article was signed by Thomas Geisweit, secretary, and Clarence N. Cook, treasurer.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER is deserving of much credit for giving publishers the interesting story of the Country Editor.

THE MAPLETON PRESS,
F. M. O'FUREY, Publisher.

Howard Railsback, Author

MOLINE, Ill., January 5, 1923.

TO EDITOR & PUBLISHER: Many of the great men in this country are seldom heard of or from. All men do not acquire greatness by having their lives laid bare in an efficiency publication; in fact, a number of men who have had their lives bared got only a free hair-cut and life.

So we are not trying to heap any greatness or undeserved honor on Howard M. Railsback, director of advertising for Deere & Company; we just want to let you know that he has had published in book form a few of the poems he has written. They are called Songs of the Soil. The book is decorated in good taste, is copyrighted and is in big demand. Mr. Railsback, however, has no intention now of marketing the book. He has received so many calls for certain of the poems which have appeared individually in many publications, that he decided to assemble them under one cover to keep them in order. He has had a few of the books distributed among appreciative friends.

Some of the poems won for the author the praise of Secretary Houston and Secretary Baker during the war, and 100,000 copies of one of the set were circulated by the Vermont Experimental station.

Mr. Railsback, besides directing the writing of copy that sells Deere & Company implements all over the world, is editor of The Furrow, a quarterly agricultural magazine which goes to 2,000,000 farmers, and of Hustling for Business which goes to agents and salesmen.

Mr. Railsback, in his Songs of the Soil, comes close to rivaling the works of James Whitcomb Riley. His songs have the same ring and they make the reader feel just as good.

Thank you.

R. C. BIMSON.

DOLLAR PULLERS

Advertising and circulation managers are always on the lookout for new ideas that will increase advertising receipts and win new circulation. Your idea for increasing advertising or circulation may not appeal to your manager, but it may be just the thing that some other manager wants. EDITOR & PUBLISHER will pay $1 for each idea printed under this head. The fact that the idea is now being used in your city does not bar it from the department. Address your communication to the DOLLAR PULLER EDITOR. When they appear clip them and mail them in and receive payment. Unavailable ideas will not be returned.

THE San Antonio Express ran a classified section devoted to merchants' suggestions for Christmas presents that could be purchased from them. The "classifieds" were so popular as to create the suggestion that a column or so of such notices for birthday presents might prove profitable to a newspaper and popular with advertisers and readers.—W. H. M.

An Omaha tailor allows a credit of $7.50 for a limited time each year on any old suit or overcoat a patron may bring to his store when he buys a new suit or overcoat. These old clothes he gives to the newspapers to distribute to the poor of the city. It's a good advertising stunt for the tailor and the newspapers get liberal advertising copy.—H. J. W.

Each day, the picture of some school child is printed by the Toledo News Bee. The subject, upon calling at the office, gets theatre tickets for the entire family for a local theatre performance. The lucky ones then write criticisms of the plays they see and monthly cash prizes are awarded to those whose criticism are adjudged the best.—B. A. T.

When "Josephine," who is the most fashionable milliner of Austin, Tex., made arrangements to move her store at the beginning of the New Year, she announced the fact in a way somewhat different from the ordinary. She had herself photographed with her arms full of hat boxes. The picture was made into a two-column cut which was run under the head: "Josephine Is Moving to 912 Congress Avenue." In smaller type below the cut was printed: "The phenomenal values in Millinery and Art Objects which have moved you to buy freely, have moved us to secure new quarters, which are larger than those we moved from. We've moved and are now ready to show you a complete array of the newest in spring hats. It's Your Move Now."—J. T.

Games and plays are essential to the health and livelihood of our children. And children appreciate new games and plays very highly. In order to accommodate the little fellow, why not devote a part of a column to the new plays and games. These games and plays could be sent in by the public, and the newest and best ones selected and published.—B. F. C.

"One of Topeka's finest photographers inserted in one of his advertisements, 'How much you cherish and preserve that old daguerreotype, which is the only likeness in your family of your great-great-grandfather, Your posterity will be more than pleased to be the possessor of a photograph taken of you today. Make appointments now.' This brought in a great amount of trade and incidently many of those who called brought with them their 'tin plates' to see if a copy could not be made from them on paper. The idea worked fine."—J. W. H.

Many high schools have classes in advertising and selling. It ought not to be a difficult matter to arrange to have the students in these classes sell classified advertising space in your paper. The school authorities will be glad of the opportunity to secure for the students practical applications of the theories taught in the classroom; you will secure a corps of enthusiastic solicitors at your usual commission basis of payment; and the students will go into the project with zest because of the novelty as well as the money to be earned.—D. R.

We are running twice a week an automobile directory of seven full columns. Six of these columns are occupied by small display advertisements none smaller that two columns by two inches, and none larger than two columns by eight inches. The copy can be changed but once a month. Nothing new is claimed for this idea, but the kick is in the seventh column. Instead of a long winded story, it is full of small personal news items written along the country paper style. In the current page there were thirty-six items, no two about the same person. This material is gathered and written by the salesman who handles the advertising on the page. After the feature was started a number of advertisers called in by phone without solicitation and reserved space—G. C. C.

A Texas shoe firm advertises: "We believe no shoe on earth can outlast ours—for the money. And just to prove this we make the following offer." Then follows the announcement that they will award a pair of shoes to the person who has worn a pair of their shoes the longest period of time, and a pair of silk hose to the person bringing in the pair of shoes that have been worn second to the longest. This is a little contest that has some point to it. Any shoe dealer would certainly be glad to consider this idea—J. T.

Instead of paying employees' salaries in the form of cash or check, the New York Times began, recently paying all salaries with a special form of identification check. The check, drawn on the 42d Street branch of the Corn Exchange Bank, has, in addition to the usual wording, a dotted line in the lower left hand corner. The person, to whom the check is payable, signs his name on this line when he is presented with the check. When he presents it for payment, he identifies himself by indorsing it.—J. A.

Give envelopes and blanks for bills with the name of the paper on them to your carriers. Encourage them to send these in to their customers on the first of the month. The business-like methods of your carriers will reflect favorably on the paper.—D. R.

In conjunction with a story about the convenience of the installment plan in purchasing articles that require too large a lump sum for many people, secure advertisements from the various stores in town selling on the credit plan.—D. R.

One of the Ford agents of Austin, Tex., is planning a "Ford Day" to be held some time during the early spring. In co-operation with twelve or fifteen other business firms of the city this company is going to offer fourteen prizes for those coming to the city in a Ford on that day. The first prize will be awarded the Ford owner bringing the largest load of people and coming the longest distance. The second goes to the oldest couple driving a Ford to town. The third will be awarded to the two flappiest flappers, bobbed hair and knickers, driving a Ford. The other awards are similar, and altogether, they should bring an array of contestants that will afford a mirthful festivity. The newspapers will no doubt share in the benifits of this stunt as it will take considerable publicity to make it a success.—J. T.

The New York World during the recent holidays mailed a penholder and pencil to each one of its thousands of newsdealers and distributors. Each penholder and pencil with the imprint, "Compliments of the New York World," was dispatched in a specially prepared envelope with an appropriate imprint of holly, commemorative of the Christmas spirit. The hundreds of letters of thanks received and words of commendation from dealers who spoke of it in person, attested to the interest the enterprise evoked.—H.

Almost invariably an Automobile Advertisement quotes the price of the car advertised as F. O. B. Factory. We have found it easy to sell an "Automobile Directory" which does nothing but list the different cars with the "Delivered" price. The space used in this directory by each firm is necessarily small, but the aggregate amounts to considerable; and its advertising value is great because it does what most automobile advertising does not, and that is quote a definite and total price.—G. C. C.

The Fort Worth Star Telegram has sold the slogan "A HOME OF YOUR OWN IN 1923" to the real estate advertisers of Fort Worth who have agreed to feature this slogan in every piece of copy carried by them during 1923. This slogan is more definite than merely the suggestion that everyone own their own home as is featured by some real estate men. Almost everyone plans some day to own their own home but the constant repetition of this slogan "A HOME OF YOUR OWN IN 1923" in every piece of copy carried in the real estate columns of the daily papers will greatly increase the lineage carried by each individual advertisers, benefiting the newspapers, and the slogan itself benefits the advertisers by suggesting that the prospect buy his home in 1923 instead of at some future time, thereby insuring that he will buy while the advertiser may still have an opportunity of selling him and so increase the advertiser's business during the coming year.—L. V.

THE MECHANICAL SIDE

O. C. STADDEN is now superintendent of the Bismarck (N. D.) Daily Tribune.

Clark Hollabaugh, an old time machine operator of the Cedar Rapids (Ia.) Gazette, was given a farewell party and presented with a gold pencil by the employees of the plant on January 3. He is leaving to make his home in California.

Henry Munch, stereotyper of the Kingston (N. Y.) Daily Freeman, who was hit December 9 by a skidding automobile and had his leg injured, has resumed his position.

Stephen H. Horgan, dean among photo-engravers, is now associated with the Powers Brothers, New York, in their numerous photo-engraving and kindred enterprises. Their newest enterprise is the manufacture and sale of Xactone Dry Plates, which are sensitive to all colors to a degree heretofore considered impossible.

William Brash, 24 years as head of the Salt Lake City Tribune stereotype department, retired recently. He had been engaged in stereotype work since the earlies 80s.

The Intertype Corporation has recently installed Intertype slug casting machines in the following New York state daily newspaper composing rooms: Gloversville Leader-Republican; Mechanicsville Hudson Valley Times; Amsterdam Recorder and Democrat; Troy Times; and Albany Knickerbocker Press and Evening News.

The Miami (Fla.) Metropolis recently installed a second 16-page Duplex tubular press.

The Albuquerque (N. M.) Herald building on South Third street will be completed on or about March 1.

The Springfield (Mass.) Union has installed eight Model C Intertype machines.

The Moberly (Mo.) Monitor-Index recently purchased the building at 218 and 220 North William street, Moberly, for a permanent home for the paper.

The Malden (Mass.) Evening News has incorporated as the Malden Evening News, Inc., capitalization $15,000. The incorporators are Frank A. Bayrd, Blanche S. Bayrd and Adelaide B. Bayrd, all of Malden.

The Provo (Utah) Daily Herald, which became a daily paper last year, was recently incorporated with a capital of $25,000 in $1 shares. E. C. Rogers is named as president and N. Gunnar Rasmussen as secretary.

Exponent Building New Home

The Clarksburg (W. Va.) Exponent is building a new home, 62 by 150 feet, on Hewes street, between 3rd and 4th streets, with light and air on three sides. The paper will move in within a few months and at that time among the new equipment which will be installed will be a 36-page Goss press of four decks and a color deck.

Miss Roberts Heads Telegram

Miss Belle McCord Roberts, daughter of the late Frank C. Roberts, has become the editor and publisher of the Long Beach (Cal.) Daily Telegram, and is also president of the company. J. K. Penny, business manager of the Telegram since 1904, has sold his interests and is succeeded by S. S. Conklin, who will also be secretary-treasurer of the company.

MOXIE TIES UP STUNTS WITH DAILY SPACE

Let others keep trying, you're so satisfying,
There's nothing like Moxie for mine."

This in sheet music form has been distributed widely as well as in music roll and phonograph record form. It appears once in a while in newspaper copy.

Mr. Archer has collated much of the evidence in approximately 50 trials which have been brought against firms which have attempted to market imitations of Moxie or against dealers who have substituted. All decisions have been given wide publicity in newspaper space.

During the Jewish New Year, it took the opportunity to wish all of its Jewish friends a happy New Year through the Jewish press—something most advertisers did not think of.

It is not uncommon for the company to feature up some particularly meritorious salesman or wholesaler. It may readily be appreciated what good-will a piece of copy like this about Davies-Strauss-Stauffer Company, distributors at Bethlehem, Allentown, Easton and Bangor, Pa., fostered:

"The Moxie Company is very proud of this firm.

"The value of the Moxie they have distributed has mounted up into the hundreds of thousands of dollars.

"The weight of the Moxie handled by them and the empties returned to our laboratories had reached on June 30th, 1921, the tremendous total of ten million, seven hundred and sixty-seven thousand, six hundred pounds.

"To move the total amount of Moxie and empty Moxie bottles handled, sold and delivered by Davies-Strauss-Stauffer Company would require a procession of five thousand, three hundred and eighty three fully loaded one-ton trucks.

"The business represented by the dealings of the Moxie Company with this concern alone has given employment to thousands of people, directly and indirectly.

"The Moxie Company is tremendously appreciative of the Davies-Strauss-Stauffer Company and the business built up by its progressive methods.

"We feel confident that as time goes on, the achievements of this company in serving Moxie to the public through its many dealers, will make the above figures look small.

"Drink Moxie. 'O. K.'d by millions.'"

The Moxie Company is blazing a trail for a type of advertising which will become more common in the future in connection with the use of newspaper display: the flexible appropriation which is handled from day to day and which can tie up with special topical happenings and stunts. Even though it means extra work, newspaper publishers welcome all developments which increase the effectiveness of newspaper advertising.

HUNCHES

Managing editor and city editors are always on the lookout for news; and feature ideas that can be used locally. Editor & Publisher will pay $1 for each hunch published under this head. The fact that the hunch is not being worked successfully in your city does not bar it from this department. Address your contributions to the Hunch Editor. When they appear, clip them and mail them in and receive payment. Unavailable hunches will not be returned.

"OUR Most Unreasonable Customer" would make a good series. Interviews with merchants and clerks will provide the material. —C. W. V. B.

Here is a suggestion for a post-Christmas story. What was the effect of Christmas upon the savings departments of your local banks? You will probably find that more accounts are opened in the week intervening between Christmas and New Year's Day than in any other week of the year, but the total amount of money involved in the new accounts will probably not equal the sum that the savings department handed out to its depositors in order that they might purchase Christmas gifts. And yet, the bank's eye is concentrated particularly upon new accounts. What local firms gave Christmas gifts in the form of bank accounts as a start on the road to thrift?—D. R.

What do the men and women who patronize the employment agencies in your city have to say about local people as employers? How do they compare local employers with the employers in other cities? Some striking, unusual, and very interesting human interest stuff could be secured by getting interviews with such men and women.—F. H. W.

One day recently our woman reporter chanced in conversation with a stalwart suffragette to find that her interest in the ballot had evaporated almost immediately the fight was won. Politics had ceased to have for her the slightest allurement and she was now devoting herself to some other crusade. Have you noticed that after the ballot was conferred on women the more conscientious users of it often turned out to be the anti-suffragists, who didn't want this added duty, but who promptly shouldered it when it was finally imposed? Is this universally true? Are there many women who have not even bothered to register? Are the suffragettes in your city taking up another line of resistance, merely for the fight and not for the prize? This should prove an interesting article, coming as it does just a couple of years after the granting of the franchise to women, this has been the "testing period."—R. M. C.

What man in your city has held the greatest number of jobs? It would make a striking and unusual feature to run a contest to find the most "jobbed" man. A prize of $10 or so could be offered for the man who has held down the greatest number of jobs in his life and all of the contestants should be required to tell about their experiences in letters. The letters could then be published. Such personal, intimate stuff would be sure to interest all the paper's readers.—F. H. W.

Where is the "timber line" of your city? How close to the main business section do trees grow? If there happens to be one or two, maybe half a dozen in the business district, why has it or have they been left or why originally planted—J. W. H.

There was a time when the young man was advised to "get into business for himself even though it were only as proprietor of a peanut stand." Since many of the lines of lesser business have been pre-empted by immigrants, since there has been a loud hue and cry about too many retailers, and since the development of corporations and the creation of many salaried positions the old advice is not as frequently given. What advice have the bankers, the mayor, and big business men of today to offer?—C. W. V. B.

"Impressions of a teller" makes a good feature. Have some local bank teller recite some of the things persons do when they visit a bank. Work in advice on proper handling of accounts, making out deposit slips, etc., as well as how bankers identify counterfeits, signatures, and how a foreign check is routed before it reaches the issuing bank for cancellation.—B. A. T.

Veterinary surgery has made great progress of recent years and some of the men in the profession are doing some very unusual things. One surgeon recently operated on a toy Boston terrier puppy for appendicitis and also mended a broken jaw for an Airedale, using silver wire and doing the job just the way it would be done for a human. A chance for either a serious writer or humorist!—C. W. V. B.

In an Iowa city negroes are the greatest users of special delivery stamps. Saturday is the big day as far as the sale of these stamps are concerned. Sunday is the big special delivery day. Personal, business and love letters with the last name far exceeding the others are sent by special delivery. In one month 8,900 special delivery stamps were sold at this particular postoffice. Who are the largest users of these stamps in your city? What day and what month has the largest sales of these stamps?—G. S. Jr.

A suggestion box hangs in each department of one newspaper. Monthly awards of $5 each are made for the best suggestions received from each department (decided by the person in charge) while $1 to $5 each are paid for all other suggestions found practical and worthy of adoption. Suggestions may be on policy, economies, etc.—B. A. T.

Mrs. C. W. Miller, Jr., formerly a New York newspaper woman, is now writing features for the Syracuse (N. Y.) Telegram. City editor John F. Cullen assigns her to the Hunches' suggestions printed in the Editor & Publisher each week, along with her other local stories.—S.

The Albuquerque Morning Journal published letters written by some of the local firemen showing and explaining how most of the fires in the city were started. According to the observation of these firemen the majority of fires were started through ignorance or thoughtlessness of the occupants of homes. These articles also explained how to get in touch with the Fire Department without delay and confusion. As a great deal of fires everywhere are preventable such articles as these should be sought after by more city papers.—B. F. C.

Some of the people in your city have kept diaries for years and some of them would not be averse to letting you publish edited copies of their diaries for former years. Such diaries, if published, would be a very personal, intimate and interesting revelation of local conditions in by-gone years and so would be sure to get a lot of attention from the readers of the paper. A prize of $10 or so might be offered for the most interesting one-year old-time diary and in this way you could get a number of diaries to choose from.—F. H. W.

Have you any bear stories in your section? In Rochester, N. Y., a driver had to bump a black bear several times with his auto to keep him from climbing in. Short collection of these stories, told with an "old-timer's" drawl will go well with your public.—P. E. M.

Right in line with the Ku Klux Klan stuff now running one of our reporters with a historical bent hunted through the old files of the early 70's and found what local residents had gone South after the Civil War and during the reconstruction period. He studied local histories and was surprised that many old-timers from the city had gone on carpet-bagging and various other expeditions to Dixie, and some of them returned. From them he gathered corking material for a corking feature. Most of their stories differed widely from the conception of the old Klan given the public by the book "The Clansman," and Griffith's film "The Birth of a Nation."—C. A. G.

Do the police in your city maintain an information booth? If so, a good feature story can be made out of the experiences of the officer in charge, for he sees much of humor and much of tragedy in the course of the day's work. Some of the questions asked seem almost too didiculous to be true. For instance, a man walked up to the information booth in Detroit and asked where he could take "the boat for San Francisco." A woman wanted the officer to give her some information on how to cut seed potatoes. If your police do not maintain an information booth the traffic officers on the busiest corners are usually good for a story which will play up the human interest side of the work.—C. E. L.

"As a good summer story, get your photographer to snap the license numbers of a large number of out-of-state cars and if possible get data on where the occupants are going and why they stopped in your town. A good feature story could be obtained this way by running a large cut of all these numbers arranged to suit."—J. W. H.

Man-Hunting in the United States

To a man with a product to be sold in large quantity throughout the country, the problem is largely one of finding people with money to buy the advertised goods and then putting the selling talk directly before them.

It is all well enough to buy glittering generalities represented in magazine space, painted signs, street car cards, etc., etc., if the advertiser can afford the luxury of such purchase of indirect "cumulative effect," "dealer influence," "confidence inspiring" publicity.

One gloriously high-class magazine of very limited circulation gets business on the theory that it is only bought by the select few in each town. Of course it never tells which few or whether they are live folks or just people.

In the light of information which is now available to all, it is possible for any one with goods to sell to secure an advance survey of each and every important selling centre before spending his money for advertising. He can find out how many people of a certain purchasing power live in any territory, the market conditions, a list of the key dealers, and he can advertise directly to all prospective purchasers over the signatures of local dealers in local newspapers, which are read every day by every worth-while person in the community.

Man-hunting in the United States is about the most interesting phase of business you can find.

Our daily newspapers provide the channel for getting contact overnight if you wish it, at a lower cost per unit reached and per sale made than any other advertising media.

—the best way to sell John Smith is obviously in his home town where your goods are on sale and through his local Newspapers.

Is it logical to think that John Smith can be sold through mediums of thinly scattered national circulation said to reach Smith's neighbor and the influential citizen who lives on the hill?

Daily newspapers reach everybody in precisely the best markets you select, make quick sales in big volume, minimize evils of substitution.

Don't put too much credence on the claim that the majority will imitate the minority. Don't you think John Smith thinks for himself? The whole country is John Smith and his wife.

In other words, the Newspaper is the shortest distance between John Smith and your merchandise.

For Fourteen Years Has Maintained a Decisive Leadership in Display Advertising

This continuous leadership of the Boston Post means just one thing—continuous and positive results to its advertisers. To lead all Boston newspapers in Local and National Display Advertising for a period of fourteen consecutive years is an achievement based on performance.

To have carried, during all this period, an overwhelming larger amount of retail advertising than any other Boston paper, is the real test of a medium—the merchant knows.

On the opposite page is a detailed analysis of the advertising lineage in the three leading Boston newspapers for 1922. These figures tell the TRUE story of the Boston situation, and complete the Post's remarkable record of—

Is the Star Performer in Display Advertising Among Boston Papers for the Year 1922

The year's figures, presented in statistical form, show the Boston Post's supremacy as the ONE outstanding leader in Display Advertising.

The totals on National Advertising include ALL "general" advertising invariably determined to be National in character. Financial is classified separately as it contains a large proportion of lineage that is distinctly local business.

Stars mark the leader in each group—count the POST stars.

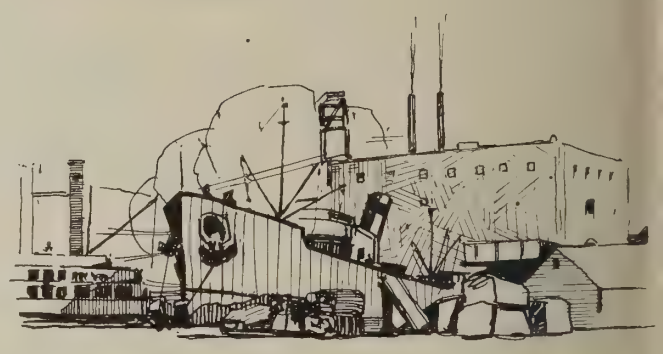
New Orleans
The Market



NEW ORLEANS is the South's greatest market, in a great buying area that is ready to receive any worthy product.

New Orleans, commonly called the billion dollar market is the second largest port in the United States and gate way to the Mississippi Valley. It is the trading center of a prosperous, thriving agricultural territory financially solid and growing fast.

New Orleans itself has a population of 400,000 people. Here business is always good; industries are on a normal basis and bank deposits indicate a steady trend towards increased thrift and community stability.

New Orleans market offers unlimited possibilities to the manufacture of meritorious products. It is a market well worth covering and is well adapted for all classes of merchandise.

New Orleans and its billion dollar market can be covered and covered thoroughly through the foremost influential newspaper—The Times-Picayune.

New Orleans population is headed fast towards the million mark, —Now is the time to plant your product in the New Orleans market and let it grow with the section.

The Medium

The Times-Picayune circulation is real home circulation —it is the preferred newspaper of both class and mass.

The Times-Picayune has the largest circulation of any other newspaper as shown by A. B. C. reports for the year ending Sept. 30, 1922.

DAILY CIRCULATION 73,604
SUNDAY CIRCULATION 96,918

THE Times-Picayune is the only newspaper that effectively covers the New Orleans market and which may be counted upon to bring best results. Its enviable record of 1922 is proof of its dominating position.

During the twelve months of 1922, The Times-Picayune carried 15,454,103 lines of advertising, nearly double the amount carried by all other New Orleans newspapers combined.

It led all other New Orleans newspapers in 29 standard classifications out of 37.

The Times-Picayune carried 4,438,819 lines of classified advertising—1,801,701 more lines than all other New Orleans newspapers combined.

OVER 16½ MILLION LINES

Another stand-up-and-out record! The San Francisco Examiner is FIRST again in 1922 with a remarkable advertising total of—

16,906,694

Agate Lines

San Francisco

"THERE IS NO SUBSTITUTE FOR CIRCULATION" another record-

first again!

Again, in the light of cold figures, the San Francisco Examiner towers head and shoulders above any other San Francisco newspaper. Witness the record total of over sixteen and a half million lines of advertising in 1922. And remember that this outstanding leadership applies to every form of advertising lineage—display, classified, local, foreign.

Leadership is always its own explanation. There can be but one reason for this tremendous expression of advertising preference. The San Francisco Examiner is FIRST in advertising because it is FIRST in circulation and FIRST in reader-influence.

Men of business who weigh their advertising dollars as they do merchandise, find that it pays to single out the San Francisco Examiner and double their returns. For the San Francisco Examiner, through its commanding circulation, has "first call" on the rich Northern and Central California market.

Coupled with this is a Merchandising Service Bureau that makes every advertising campaign yield full selling force. For details write direct, or get in touch with our representatives.

"THERE IS NO SUBTERFUGE FOR LINEAGE"

THE MOST INTERESTING BOY IN AMERICA—HIS OWN STORY

JACKIE COOGAN

The rise of Jackie Coogan to fame and unprecedented earning power in the moving pictures has arrested the attention of everyone. No other child has ever manifested such gifts, or attained so much popularity, or become the object of such widespread affectionate interest.

Jackie will tell newspaper readers of his early struggles, his rise to eminence, and of his experiences as an actor and as a small boy among other boys. The stories will be prepared by a famous writer of bedtime tales and will be illustrated with pictures drawn by Jackie himself. The series will appeal to all children and their mothers, and should prove unusually successful. We expect to begin releasing some time in February.

WILL ROGERS A WINNER

In the space of four weeks' time, the new weekly series by Will Rogers, commenting upon current politics and world affairs, has gone over the top to remarkable success. We have already sold to leading papers in practically all the important cities in the country, and are receiving new orders daily. Will needs no praise from us, but we will say this much anyway: He understands news and the ways of the world, he is one of our shrewdest American wits, and his newspaper articles will increase his fame. They are distinctive and excellent.

THE UNCLE WIGGILY STRIP

Howard R. Garis and Lang Campbell are making for us a four-column strip embodying the famous Uncle Wiggily characters, which we have been releasing since January 15. We already have a much larger list of papers than we thought it possible to get in so short a time.

So much for our new features; let us remind you for a moment of some of our old reliables.

IRVIN S. COBB

Daily series of humorous anecdotes going as strong as ever. When it is completed, another good feature by Mr. Cobb will follow.

FONTAINE FOX

One hundred papers use the work of this favorite cartoonist. Did you see the miniature Toonerville Trolley among the Christmas toys? Many thousands were sold.

RUBE GOLDBERG

One of the four or five big stars among the comic artists for fifteen years, and today more widely used and more popular than ever before. The list just keeps on growing. Watch "Steve Himself."

ED. HUGHES

One of the most virile draftsmen in the business. No better sport page cartoons than his.

THOMAS L. MASSON

Former Life editor, now with the Saturday Evening Post, combines wisdom with wit in his weekly humorous articles.

O. O. McINTYRE

Most successful of all writers on New York's changing scene. His daily letters and Sunday articles fascinate readers. Now becoming famous as a magazine writer.

HARRY TUTHILL

His clever strip, "Home Sweet Home," ranks with the best. Are you on the list for the new Sunday page? It is going into many excellent newspapers.

A word of caution to editors: Do not drop into the waste-basket unconsidered any proposition that comes from us by mail. If you do, an alert competitor may get a highly valuable feature that would look well in your paper. The mails are congested, we know, and so we have made a vow never to offer anything mediocre.

News Coverage of Detroit Most Thorough In U. S.

Below are the 13 largest cities in America and their largest weekday newspaper circulation in their respective trading territories (city and suburban combined) Note this list carefully and you will find that The Detroit News covers its trading territory the most thoroughly of any, with one copy of The News reaching every 4.9 units of population. Consider this most important fact when you plan your advertising campaign.

City	Population of Trading Tty	Circ. in Tr. Tty	1 Copy to Every
Detroit (News)	1,288,893	263,000	4.9
Los Angeles (Herald)	937,651	145,701	6.4
Philadelphia (Bulletin)	3,000,000	468,394	6.4
Cleveland (Press)	1,100,000	152,507	7.2
St. Louis (Post Dispatch)	1,300,000	153,196	8.5
Chicago (News)	3,500,000	374,498	9.3
Boston (Post)	2,574,115	250,255	10.3
Pittsburgh (Press)	1,371,354	133,347	10.3
San Francisco (Examiner)	1,131,597	108,687	10.4
Milwaukee (Journal)	1,000,000	93,908	10.6
Newark (News)	1,000,000	90,694	11.0

Brooklyn (Standard Union)	2,812,000	71,316	39.6

Remember, too, that Detroit has attained a degree of prosperity and employment far beyond that of any other city of its size in the country, and that The News, therefore, reaches a population with buying power

The Detroit News

Two and a Half Times Nearest Competing City Week-Day Circulation.

Greatest Sunday Circulation in Michigan

"Always in the Lead"

PRESS FOURTH IN U. S.

THE PRESS HAS ONE OF THE GREATEST INTENSIFIED CIRCULATIONS OF ANY NEWSPAPER IN THE COUNTRY

The above figures were compiled by the statistical department of The Detroit News and published as an advertisement in one of the advertising trade journals. The advertisement is reproduced at the left. Here is an unbiased and impartial survey of thirteen principal cities throughout the country. It is significant that The Press stands fourth in the entire country in the highly important point of intensive coverage.

And in Advertising

In advertising The Press leads all Cleveland Daily Newspapers. Not only is The Press first in local advertising—the local merchants' first choice—but in total paid advertising as well.

The following 1922 figures pertaining to the Cleveland Newspaper Situation reveal the clear-cut and outstanding supremacy of The Press as the dominant medium of Cleveland. Here are the weekday figures:

	Local Advertising Lines	Total Advertising Lines
The Press	8,579,032	12,800,354
Plain Dealer	5,490,240	11,154,402
The News	6,815,200	9,327,094

Some papers try to confuse and befuddle the public's mind as to who carries the greatest volume of advertising by carefully refraining from pointing out that they are comparing their seven-day issues to only six for The Press.

Daily and Sunday newspapers are not competitive.

Practically the same conditions prevail in comparing circulation figures. Some newspapers, if you please, continue to bulk their circulation and try to get away with it.

However, the lineage figures are just like the circulation figures. They should be published separately, quoted separately and read separately, because Sunday lineage is in no sense to be considered competitive with daily lineage.

The bulked circulation figures were thrown out long ago by advertising agencies and shrewd buyers of advertising space.

Yet they were just as logical as the seven-day lineage figures

Not only has The Press the largest daily circulation in Greater Cleveland, but it carries more advertising every week day of the year than either The News or Plain Dealer. Here is complete and authoritative proof of the unprecedented superiority of The Press. In no other paper but The Press is it possible to blanket the Greater Cleveland territory.

During 1922 The Press Carried 3,473,260 More Lines of Total Advertising Than The Daily News and 1,645,952 More Than The Daily Plain Dealer, Respectively

Philadelphia

Third Largest City in America, is Breaking Building Records

22,588 building operations with a total cost of $114,881,040 were begun during 1922 in Philadelphia, according to the annual report of the Bureau of Building Inspection.

Of this big sum, $49,273,320 was for 9,651 dwellings, and $5,000,000 for apartments—almost fifty percent of the total spent for real family homes in "the city of homes."

In addition, the city of Philadelphia is spending millions of dollars for sewer construction, highway betterments, subway and elevated transit and other improvements.

With this great addition to its buildings, and with every indication pointing to continuation of the construction programme, Philadelphia offers greater opportunities than ever before to manufacturers of all kinds of goods.

Dominate Philadelphia

Creat maximum impression at one cost by concentrating in the newspaper "nearly everybody" reads—

"In Philadelphia nearly everybody reads The Bulletin"

The Bulletin

The circulation of The Philadelphia Bulletin is larger than that of any other daily or Sunday newspaper published in Pennsylvania, and is one of the largest in America.

Net paid daily average circulation for 1922—493,240 copies a day.

NEW features which contribute to make the 1923 edition of THE EDITOR & PUBLISHER INTERNATIONAL YEAR BOOK not only he largest but the most useful compendium of nformation that has ever been gathered for the ewspaper and affiliated industries are many, and heir ramifications and possible uses are innumerable. Some of the outstanding departures in the present ssue are:

1. A Directory of newspaper personnel, including he names of the publisher, the editor, the managing 'ditor, the city editor, the general manager, the busiess manager, the advertising manager, the circulaion manager, the classified advertising manager and he mechanical superintendent. In addition to the ames, the table that starts on the next page also ives for each newspaper listed data on its time of ssue, whether it has a Sunday edition, its circulaion figures, its minimum advertising rates per agate ine, local and national, its special advertising repreentatives, days on which it issues a rotogravure ection, if at all, whether it operates a job printing lant, or its own engraving plant, whether it can use lates or matrices, and whether it issues a merhandising newspaper for local retail dealers.

Such a volume of information on every daily and Sunday newspaper in the United States and Canada as never been gathered before. To present it in ractical form, it was necessary to print it the long imension of the page, and to key all information hat could not be presented in brief compass.

Morning papers are indicated by a dagger before heir names †;

Evening papers are printed in roman type, without ny distinguishing mark;

Sunday editions of daily newspapers are indicated y the letter (m) after the name of the daily;

Names of special representatives are indicated by . number in parentheses ( ) following the newspaper's ame, the number referring to an alphabetical listng of the representatives which starts on page 66. he first of these numbers always refers to the Eastern representative.

The letter (d) indicates that the newspaper does ot use matrices.

The letter (t) indicates that the newspaper cannot se unmounted plates.

The form (mer) indicates that the newspaper issues paper for local retail dealers.

Boldface circulation figures are net paid totals aken from A. B. C. publishers' statements for the ix months ending October 1, 1922.

Boldface figures followed by the letter "x" are aken from A. B. C. publishers' statements for three nonths ending October 1, 1922.

Boldface figures followed by the letter "y" are aken from A. B. C. publishers' statements for the hree months ending June 30, 1922.

Boldface figures followed by the letter "w" are aken from A. B. C. auditors' reports for the six nonths ending October 1, 1922.

Light face figures are statements made to the Post Office for the six months ending October 1, 1922.

At the other end of the table, in the "Mechanical Superintendents" column, a name followed by a superior figure (1) indicates that the individual is in charge of the job printing plant only; followed by a superior figure (2) indicates that he is in charge of both newspaper and job plants. No numeral following the name indicates that he has charge of the newspaper plant only.

Political leanings are indicated by initials of the leading national parties.

It should be noted that where one advertising rate is given centered on two separate circulation figures, it applies to each of them. If the circulation figures are bracketed, the advertising rate applies to the combined circulations. Thus, a newspaper with morning and Sunday circulations stated and only one advertising rate in the national and in the local rate columns, its charge for the daily and for the Sunday issues is the same. And when a newspaper has morning and evening editions which are sold in combination only, the circulations are bracketed.

2. A Ready Reckoner for the use of buyers and sellers of newspaper advertising, enables a present or prospective advertiser to learn at a glance what it will cost him to use daily newspapers in any State of the Union or any Province of Canada. Number of daily and Sunday papers in each state is set forth, with morning, evening and Sunday circulations, and minimum advertising rates per agate line for each state. This is a familiar feature of EDITOR & PUBLISHER'S service to its readers, the present publication marking its ninth semi-annual appearance since 1919. It has been revised and corrected up to and including January 22, 1923, including all dailies of which EDITOR & PUBLISHER has a record, with their latest foreign advertising rates. Circulations are based on those given in the Newspaper Directory which precedes it.

3. Analysis by States and by Territorial Market groups of the net paid circulations and advertising rates of all daily and Sunday newspapers of the United States and of 21 monthly magazines, 8 weekly magazines, 7 class publications and 11 women's periodicals. This data has been compiled by EDITOR & PUBLISHER, with the co-operation of the Bureau of Advertising of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, to the officials of which EDITOR & PUBLISHER wishes to express its appreciation of their services. It is an absolutely unprejudiced statistical comparison, prepared by accountants who are in no way connected with the publishing business.

This data was first compiled by EDITOR & PUBLISHER four years ago and published at that time. Since then changes in both the newspaper and magazine fields have been so frequent that it has been impossible to keep the comparison up to date from year to year, until the end of 1922, when circulations and rates had reached a fairly stable level. In making the present tabulations, there was no preconceived idea to which the figures were to be made to conform.

3. Monthly lineage figures for 107 newspapers in 23 principal cities of the United States, for the years between 1914 and 1922, inclusive. The 1922 lineage totalled 1,113,020,675 lines, only 5.2 per cent behind the giant total of 1,175,021,331 lines amassed during the post-armistice business year of 1919-1920. The 1922 total was 4.2 per cent ahead of last year's figure. It was a gain of 68 per cent over 1914, the first year for which comprehensive advertising lineage figures were kept. That in itself is the best testimonial that newspaper publishers could want as to the efficacy of the space they sell—their customers are satisfied.

4. The Special Representatives, a list of whom appears on pages 66, 75, 76 and 78. They are listed alphabetically, with names preceded by a key number referring to the numeral in the Newspaper Directory beside the names of the newspapers they represent.

5. Directory of American Advertising Agencies, which for the first time is listed alphabetically, rather than geographically. In this list appears the name of the agency, addresses of its main and branch offices and the names of space-buyers. This last is the most complete directory of advertising executives that has ever been published. Another exclusive feature of this directory is that it indicates by a simple key every privilege that agencies enjoy from the various associations of newspaper and periodical publishers and in addition, it designates those who are members of the American Association of Advertising Agencies, the Association of Canadian Advertising Agencies, and the California Advertising Service Association.

Every American reader of EDITOR & PUBLISHER can find in the above at least one large joint for his 1923 statistical nourishment and in the remaining hundred pages of the YEAR BOOK, he will find several other appetizing pieces of dessert.

Another valuable, new and exclusive feature is the first compilation of standard books on all phases of the printing and publishing art. That there is great demand for such a list EDITOR & PUBLISHER has ample evidence in the form of queries from its readers during the past year. The list has been carefully selected after long study of the field, but neither the compilers nor the editors lay claim to omniscience and they will welcome any suggestions.

Activities of the press in other lands receive greater attention this year than in past editions of the YEAR BOOK. In the British Section is given a complete list of English, Scotch, Irish and Welsh newspapers, revised to December 31, 1922. An interpretative key accompanies the list, which is similar to that which has appeared in the 1921 and 1922 editions. Added to this is a complete list of British advertising agencies, giving the names and addresses of the firms which represent advertisers in Great Britain. There are also directories, similar to those in the American Section, of British journalism and advertising.

Canadian data follows the British Section, starting with the Newspaper Directory. This is compiled exactly like the American Newspaper Directory Section.

Leading dailies of Japan, with their advertising lineage for the past year, names of chief executives, advertising rates in Japanese currency per agate line, and average number of pages per issue, also form a part of the YEAR BOOK devoted to foreign lands. Circulations of these dailies are not given, for the reason that there are no recognized standards of circulation as there are in the United States and Canada. The lineage of these newspapers was compiled by an independent organization and appears for the first time.

Leading dailies of Mexico and Cuba and of Paris, France, are given for the benefit of newspaper men and advertisers interested in the press of nations with which America has close relations. Advertising rates and executive personnel of the Mexican and Cuban dailies form a valuable part of these tabulations.

Explanation: Dagger (†) indicates morning newspapers. (m) indicates Sunday morning edition; (e) indicates Sunday evening edition. (I) politically independent; (R) Republican; (D) Democratic; (Soc.) Socialist; (I-R) Independent Republican; (I-D) Independent-Democratic. (J) operate job printing plants. (E) operate own engraving plant. * indicates rotogravure section, letter following indicates day of issue as S for Sunday, M for Monday, Tu for Tuesday, W for Wednesday, Th for Thursday, F for Friday, Sat for Saturday. Mo for monthly. Figures are key numbers to the list of special advertising representatives. Where more than one number is given, the first is East and the second West. (d) do not use mats. (t) do not use plates. Boldface circulation figures are A. B. C. net paid, six months statement ending September 30, 1922; X indicates three month statement ending September 30, 1922; Y indicates three months' A. B. C. statement ending June 30, 1922; W indicates A. B. C. audit of September 30, 1922. All other circulation figures are Government statements for six months ending September 30, 1922. In cases where there is more than one edition and only one advertising rate is given it applies to each edition; combination rates are shown by brackets. In last column superior figure [1] following name indicates superintendent of job department only; superior figure [2], superintendent of mechanical department of newspaper and job department; no superior figure, superintendent of mechanical department of newspaper only. All quoted advertising rates are per agate line; where only one rate is quoted and no bracket appears it applies to each issue separately.

Explanation: Dagger (†) indicates morning newspapers. (m) indicates Sunday morning edition; (e) indicates Sunday evening edition. (I) politically independent; (R) Republican; (D) Democratic; (Soc.) Socialist; (I-R) Independent Republican; (I-D) Independent-Democratic. (J) operate job printing plants. (E) operate own engraving plant. * indicates rotogravure section, letter following indicates day of issue as S for Sunday, M for Monday, Tu for Tuesday, W for Wednesday, Th for Thursday, F for Friday, Sat for Saturday. Mo for monthly. Figures are key numbers to the list of special advertising representatives. Where more than one number is given, the first is East and the second West. (d) do not use mats. (t) do not use plates. Boldface circulation figures are A. B. C. net paid, six months statement ending September 30, 1922; X indicates three month statement ending September 30, 1922; Y indicates three months' A. B. C. statement ending June 30, 1922; W indicates A. B. C. audit of September 30, 1922. All other circulation figures are Government statements for six months ending September 30, 1922. In cases where there is more than one edition and only one advertising rate is given it applies to each edition; combination rates are shown by brackets. In last column superior figure [1] following name indicates superintendent of job department only; superior figure [2], superintendent of mechanical department of newspaper and job department; no superior figure, superintendent of mechanical department of newspaper only. All quoted advertising rates are per agate line; where only one rate is quoted and no bracket appears it applies to each issue separately.

Explanation: Dagger (†) indicates morning newspapers. (m) indicates Sunday morning edition; (e) indicates Sunday evening edition. (I) politically independent; (R) Republican; (D) Democratic; (Soc.) Socialist; (I-R) Independent Republican; (I-D) Independent-Democratic. (J) operate job printing plants. (E) operate own engraving plant. * indicates rotogravure section, letter following indicates day of issue as S for Sunday, M for Monday, Tu for Tuesday, W for Wednesday, Th for Thursday, F for Friday, Sat for Saturday. Mo for monthly. Figures are key numbers to the list of special advertising representatives. Where more than one number is given, the first is East and the second West. (d) do not use mats. (t) do not use plates. Boldface circulation figures are A. B. C. net paid, six months statement ending September 30, 1922; X indicates three month statement ending September 30, 1922; Y indicates three months' A. B. C. statement ending June 30, 1922; W indicates A. B. C. audit of September 30, 1922. All other circulation figures are Government statements for six months ending September 30, 1922. In cases where there is more than one edition and only one advertising rate is given it applies to each edition; combination rates are shown by brackets. In last column superior figure [1] following name indicates superintendent of job department only; superior figure [2], superintendent of mechanical department of newspaper and job department; no superior figure, superintendent of mechanical department of newspaper only. All quoted advertising rates are per agate line; where only one rate is quoted and no bracket appears it applies to each issue separately.

Explanation: Dagger (†) indicates morning newspapers. (m) indicates Sunday morning edition; (e) indicates Sunday evening edition. (I) politically independent; (R) Republican; (D) Democratic; (Soc.) Socialist; (I-R) Independent Republican; (I-D) Independent-Democratic. (J) operate job printing plants. (E) operate own engraving plant. * indicates rotogravure section, letter following indicates day of issue as S for Sunday, M for Monday, Tu for Tuesday, W for Wednesday, Th for Thursday, F for Friday, Sat for Saturday. Mo for monthly. Figures are key numbers to the list of special advertising representatives. Where more than one number is given, the first is East and the second West. (d) do not use mats. (t) do not use plates. Boldface circulation figures are A. B. C. net paid, six months statement ending September 30, 1922; X indicates three month statement ending September 30, 1922; Y indicates three months' A. B. C. statement ending June 30, 1922; W indicates A. B. C. audit of September 30, 1922. All other circulation figures are Government statements for six months ending September 30, 1922. In cases where there is more than one edition and only one advertising rate is given it applies to each edition; combination rates are shown by brackets. In last column superior figure [1] following name indicates superintendent of job department only; superior figure [2], superintendent of mechanical department of newspaper and job department; no superior figure, superintendent of mechanical department of newspaper only. All quoted advertising rates are per agate line; where only one rate is quoted and no bracket appears it applies to each issue separately.

Explanation: Dagger (†) indicates morning newspapers. (m) indicates Sunday morning edition; (e) indicates Sunday evening edition. (I) politically independent; (R) Republican; (D) Democratic; (Soc.) Socialist; (I-R) Independent Republican; (I-D) Independent-Democratic. (J) operate job printing plants. (E) operate own engraving plant. * indicates rotogravure section, letter following indicates day of issue as S for Sunday, M for Monday, Tu for Tuesday, W for Wednesday, Th for Thursday, F for Friday, Sat for Saturday. Mo for monthly. Figures are key numbers to the list of special advertising representatives. Where more than one number is given, the first is East and the second West. (d) do not use mats. (t) do not use plates. Boldface circulation figures are A. B. C. net paid, six months statement ending September 30, 1922; X indicates three month statement ending September 30, 1922; Y indicates three months' A. B. C. statement ending June 30, 1922; W indicates A. B. C. audit of September 30, 1922. All other circulation figures are Government statements for six months ending September 30, 1922. In cases where there is more than one edition and only one advertising rate is given it applies to each edition; combination rates are shown by brackets. In last column superior figure [1] following name indicates superintendent of job department only; superior figure [2], superintendent of mechanical department of newspaper and job department; no superior figure, superintendent of mechanical department of newspaper only. All quoted advertising rates are per agate line; where only one rate is quoted and no bracket appears it applies to each issue separately.

Explanation: Dagger (†) indicates morning newspapers. (m) indicates Sunday morning edition; (e) indicates Sunday evening edition. (I) politically independent; (R) Republican; (D) Democratic; (Soc.) Socialist; (I-R) Independent Republican; (I-D) Independent-Democratic. (J) operate job printing plants. (E) operate own engraving plant. * indicates rotogravure section, letter following indicates day of issue as S for Sunday, M for Monday, Tu for Tuesday, W for Wednesday, Th for Thursday, F for Friday, Sat for Saturday. Mo for monthly. Figures are key numbers to the list of special advertising representatives. Where more than one number is given, the first is East and the second West. (d) do not use mats. (t) do not use plates. Boldface circulation figures are A. B. C. net paid, six months statement ending September 30, 1922; X indicates three month statement ending September 30, 1922; Y indicates three months' A. B. C. statement ending June 30, 1922; W indicates A. B. C. audit of September 30, 1922. All other circulation figures are Government statements for six months ending September 30, 1922. In cases where there is more than one edition and only one advertising rate is given it applies to each edition; combination rates are shown by brackets. In last column superior figure [1] following name indicates superintendent of job department only; superior figure [2], superintendent of mechanical department of newspaper and job department; no superior figure, superintendent of mechanical department of newspaper only. All quoted advertising rates are per agate line; where only one rate is quoted and no bracket appears it applies to each issue separately.

Explanation: Dagger (†) indicates morning newspapers. (m) indicates Sunday morning edition; (e) indicates Sunday evening edition. (I) politically independent; (R) Republican; (D) Democratic; (Soc.) Socialist; (I-R) Independent Republican; (I-D) Independent-Democratic. (J) operate job printing plants. (E) operate own engraving plant. * indicates rotogravure section, letter following indicates day of issue as S for Sunday, M for Monday, Tu for Tuesday, W for Wednesday, Th for Thursday, F for Friday, Sat for Saturday. Mo for monthly. Figures are key numbers to the list of special advertising representatives. Where more than one number is given, the first is East and the second West. (d) do not use mats. (t) do not use plates. Boldface circulation figures are A. B. C. net paid, six months statement ending September 30, 1922; X indicates three month statement ending September 30, 1922; Y indicates three months' A. B. C. statement ending June 30, 1922; W indicates A. B. C. audit of September 30, 1922. All other circulation figures are Government statements for six months ending September 30, 1922. In cases where there is more than one edition and only one advertising rate is given it applies to each edition; combination rates are shown by brackets. In last column superior figure [1] following name indicates superintendent of job department only; superior figure [2], superintendent of mechanical department of newspaper and job department; no superior figure, superintendent of mechanical department of newspaper only. All quoted advertising rates are per agate line; where only one rate is quoted and no bracket appears it applies to each issue separately.

Explanation: Dagger (†) indicates morning newspapers. (m) indicates Sunday morning edition; (e) indicates Sunday evening edition. (I) politically independent; (R) Republican; (D) Democratic; (Soc.) Socialist; (I-R) Independent Republican; (I-D) Independent-Democratic. (J) operate job printing plants. (E) operate own engraving plant. * indicates rotogravure section, letter following indicates day of issue as S for Sunday, M for Monday, Tu for Tuesday, W for Wednesday, Th for Thursday, F for Friday, Sat for Saturday. Mo for monthly. Figures are key numbers to the list of special advertising representatives. Where more than one number is given, the first is East and the second West. (d) do not use mats. (t) do not use plates. Boldface circulation figures are A. B. C. net paid, six months statement ending September 30, 1922; X indicates three month statement ending September 30, 1922; Y indicates three months' A. B. C. statement ending June 30, 1922; W indicates A. B. C. audit of September 30, 1922. All other circulation figures are Government statements for six months ending September 30, 1922. In cases where there is more than one edition and only one advertising rate is given it applies to each edition; combination rates are shown by brackets. In last column superior figure [1] following name indicates superintendent of job department only; superior figure [2], superintendent of mechanical department of newspaper and job department; no superior figure, superintendent of mechanical department of newspaper only. All quoted advertising rates are per agate line; where only one rate is quoted and no bracket appears it applies to each issue separately. (‡) circulated free.

Looking Back Through The Book of the Year

WE FIND many pleasant pages relating to the progress of this newspaper. There were substantial gains in both local and national advertising, such gains relating largely to the highest grades of merchandise. The American's gain in financial advertising was 37% for the year, in automobiles 50%. Here, again, the highest grades of advertising were represented.

All this, however, was to have been expected. The American has decidedly the largest three-cent circulation in New England, going into the best of family and business circles. Local shops have learned that it pays best to advertise their best merchandise in this best Boston newspaper.

National advertisers will be wise to do likewise.

Spokane and Its Territory

—50 Years of Remarkable Progress!

JUST 50 years ago an Indian trading post was established at Spokane Falls, as it was then called. Four years later the Nez Perce Indian uprising caused the few white settlers to flee for their lives. By 1880, however, the population was 500, but Indian tepees were still on all sides. For the few settlers in the vast outlying country pack horses and prairie schooners furnished the only means of transportation to the trading post.

In 1889, with a population of approximately 11,500, the town was almost completely destroyed by fire. However, it grew rapidly during the following years, both in population and importance as a trading center.

In place of the pine shacks and tepees, modern buildings were constructed until now we find a prosperous city of substantial, imposing structures as indicated by the view below of the busy, hustling Spokane of today

A vast net-work of railways and improved highways have obliterated the trails over which the early day commerce was transported. 360 hustling cities and towns have sprung up within a 200-mile radius of Spokane.

Spokane is now the hub of more railroad mileage than any point West of Omaha, and the logical distributing center of one of America's richest and most prosperous markets. 6 transcontinental railways converge at, and 12 branch and local railways radiate from Spokane and intimately connect it with its rich surrounding territory. How closely this connection is appears from the fact that there are 118 passenger trains and 56 freight trains arriving or departing from Spokane railway stations every day.

As a distributing center, Spokane's growth was retarded prior to the readjustment of freight rates in 1918. Its wholesale business has jumped from $50,000,000 to more than $180,000,000 annually within the last fou years, and with the recent decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which put an end to discrimination in favor of Coast cities, Spokane's importance as a distributing center is permanently established.

The 1922 yield of new wealth in the field so thoroughly covered by THE SPOKESMAN-REVIEW amounts to over $400,000,000, or more than $2,000 for each and every home.

HIGH STANDARD OF LIVING—RESPONSIVE: The Spokane Country consumers demand and will pay for good quality. They are receptive to new products, new ideas. No section of the United States is more responsive to advertising based on sound merchandising.

Here's

Your Key to the Buying Power of The Prosperous Spokane Country

—Heart of the Pacific Northwest!

THE 1922 revenue from the Spokane Country farms and orchards alone (heart and richest agricultural section of the four states indicated above) approximated $275,000,000 The Spokane Country now yields 1/11th the Nation's wheat; 1/7th of its boxed apples, and contributes heavily to the Nation's production of other cereals and fruits, together with large yields of potatoes, poultry, dairy products, cattle, swine and sheep.

The 800 sawmills of the Spokane Country shipped during 1922 more than $45,000,000 worth of lumber—beating 1921 by over 50%

The 200 mines of the Spokane Country, during 1922 showed 35% gain in production over 1921, while metal prices generally were better. Significant, because this territory yields 40% of the Nation's lead, 30% of its silver and copper; 12% of its gold, and 9% of its zinc

Just 10 years after the first trading post, THE SPOKESMAN-REVIEW was established, and for 40 years it has taken an active part in the development of Spokane and its territory.

FIRST of all a NEWSpaper, growing up with its field, enjoying the confidence of its readers to an unusual degree; these considerations, combined with its sweeping circulation of the quality kind, make THE SPOKESMAN-REVIEW (Daily, Sunday and Twice-a-Week) THE KEY TO THE BUYING POWER of this prosperous Spokane Country market—Heart of the Pacific Northwest.

As evidence that national advertisers and agencies are recognizing the exceptional opportunities offered in this field, they placed 15.9% more business with THE SPOKESMAN-REVIEW during the first six months of 1922 than for the same period of 1921, while the increase for the five months period—July to November inclusive—beat 1921 by 36%.

This year, the Golden Anniversary of Spokane as a trading center, offers exceptional opportunities to introduce new products and intensify sales efforts in this market. Good business is assured Go-Getters, and your distribution and avertising may be made to closely coincide throughout this field through THE SPOKESMAN-REVIEW, Daily, Sunday and Twice-a-Week

By These Facts You Can Pick Your Indianapolis Newspaper

When you buy space you buy circulation The circulation of The Indianapolis News is the largest daily circulation in Indiana, and among the largest three-cent evening circulations in America. The per cent. coverage is very high, reaching as it does practically every worth while family in Indianapolis. More than 95% of The News' circulation is home delivered. It is universally acknowledged that The News commands a reader interest second to no other paper.

You want to know proved power of results Year after year The Indianapolis News has carried practically the same volume of advertising—local, foreign, and classified—as both other Indianapolis papers combined (6 against 13 issues a week), after rejecting thousands of lines of available copy. This could not be unless The News delivered results. Your proof of results is in the successful experience of the many advertisers who have used The News exclusively or as the preferred medium for so many years. The dominance of The News in volume of advertising carried proves the value of its columns in results.

You buy, too, the prestige of the medium For fifty-three years The News has been a great *news*paper. Always it has been ranked editorially with the greatest American newspapers. It commands a reader loyalty and a reader confidence born of its half century of keeping faith with its readers. The editorial and advertising columns of The News are clean. The News rejects annually from 500,000 to a million lines of advertising which are available, and which usually run in other Indianapolis papers.

You want to know local advertisers' opinions Local advertisers know all about a newspaper. Their endorsement when not predicated upon low rate, is a clear guide to the value of a medium. There is but fifteen per cent difference between the local and national rates of The News, yet Indianapolis department stores use more space in The News (6 issues a week) than in both other Indianapolis papers (13 issues a week). In practically every other classification the News leads both other papers combined. It leads in Classified.

The merchandising department of The News has accurate data on every successful selling and advertising campaign in the Indianapolis Radius in the last five years. This information is available to interested advertisers and agencies. The specific data The News has collected on this great Indianapolis Radius Market will help you plan your campaign for the greatest results at the lowest cost. Make use of the service of the merchandising department.

Explanation: Dagger (†) indicates morning newspapers. (m) indicates Sunday morning edition; (e) indicates Sunday evening edition. (I) politically independent; (R) Republican; (D) Democratic; (Soc.) Socialist; (I-R) Independent Republican; (I-D) Independent-Democratic. (J) operate job printing plants. (E) operate own engraving plant. * indicates rotogravure section, letter following indicates day of issue as S for Sunday, M for Monday, Tu for Tuesday, W for Wednesday, Th for Thursday, F for Friday, Sat for Saturday. Mo for monthly. Figures are key numbers to the list of special advertising representatives. Where more than one number is given, the first is East and the second West. (d) do not use mats. (t) do not use plates. Boldface circulation figures are A. B. C. net paid, six months statement ending September 30, 1922; X indicates three month statement ending September 30, 1922; Y indicates three months' A. B. C. statement ending June 30, 1922; W indicates A. B. C. audit of September 30, 1922. All other circulation figures are Government statements for six months ending September 30, 1922. In cases where there is more than one edition and only one advertising rate is given it applies to each edition; combination rates are shown by brackets. In last column superior figure [1] following name indicates superintendent of job department only; superior figure [2], superintendent of mechanical department of newspaper and job department; no superior figure, superintendent of mechanical department of newspaper only. All quoted advertising rates are per agate line; where only one rate is quoted and no bracket appears it applies to each issue separately.

Explanation: Dagger (†) indicates morning newspapers. (m) indicates Sunday morning edition; (e) indicates Sunday evening edition. (I) politically independent; (R) Republican; (D) Democratic; (Soc.) Socialist; (I-R) Independent Republican; (I-D) Independent-Democratic. (J) operate job printing plants. (E) operate own engraving plant. * indicates rotogravure section, letter following indicates day of issue as S for Sunday, M for Monday, Tu for Tuesday, W for Wednesday, Th for Thursday, F for Friday, Sat for Saturday. Mo for monthly. Figures are key numbers to the list of special advertising representatives. Where more than one number is given, the first is East and the second West. (d) do not use mats. (t) do not use plates. Boldface circulation figures are A. B. C. net paid, six months statement ending September 30, 1922; X indicates three month statement ending September 30, 1922; Y indicates three months' A. B. C. statement ending June 30, 1922; W indicates A. B. C. audit of September 30, 1922. All other circulation figures are Government statements for six months ending September 30, 1922. In cases where there is more than one edition and only one advertising rate is given it applies to each edition; combination rates are shown by brackets. In last column superior figure [1] following name indicates superintendent of job department only; superior figure [2], superintendent of mechanical department of newspaper and job department; no superior figure, superintendent of mechanical department of newspaper only. All quoted advertising rates are per agate line; where only one rate is quoted and no bracket appears it applies to each issue separately.

Explanation: Dagger (†) indicates morning newspapers. (m) indicates Sunday morning edition; (e) indicates Sunday evening edition. (I) politically independent; (R) Republican; (D) Democratic; (Soc.) Socialist; (I-R) Independent Republican; (I-D) Independent-Democratic. (J) operate job printing plants. (E) operate own engraving plant. * indicates rotogravure section, letter following indicates day of issue as S for Sunday, M for Monday, Tu for Tuesday, W for Wednesday, Th for Thursday, F for Friday, Sat for Saturday. Mo for monthly. Figures are key numbers to the list of special advertising representatives. Where more than one number is given, the first is East and the second West. (d) do not use mats. (t) do not use plates. Boldface circulation figures are A. B. C. net paid, six months statement ending September 30, 1922; X indicates three month statement ending September 30, 1922; Y indicates three months' A. B. C. statement ending June 30, 1922; W indicates A. B. C. audit of September 30, 1922. All other circulation figures are Government statements for six months ending September 30, 1922. In cases where there is more than one edition and only one advertising rate is given it applies to each edition; combination rates are shown by brackets. In last column superior figure [1] following name indicates superintendent of job department only; superior figure [2], superintendent of mechanical department of newspaper and job department; no superior figure, superintendent of mechanical department of newspaper only. All quoted advertising rates are per agate line; where only one rate is quoted and no bracket appears it applies to each issue separately.

Explanation: Dagger (†) indicates morning newspapers. (m) indicates Sunday morning edition; (e) indicates Sunday evening edition. (I) politically independent; (R) Republican; (D) Democratic; (Soc.) Socialist; (I-R) Independent Republican; (I-D) Independent-Democratic. (J) operate job printing plants. (E) operate own engraving plant. * indicates rotogravure section, letter following indicates day of issue as S for Sunday, M for Monday, Tu for Tuesday, W for Wednesday, Th for Thursday, F for Friday, Sat for Saturday. Mo for monthly. Figures are key numbers to the list of special advertising representatives. Where more than one number is given, the first is East and the second West. (d) do not use mats. (t) do not use plates. Boldface circulation figures are A. B. C. net paid, six months statement ending September 30, 1922; X indicates three month statement ending September 30, 1922; Y indicates three months' A. B. C. statement ending June 30, 1922; W indicates A. B. C. audit of September 30, 1922. All other circulation figures are Government statements for six months ending September 30, 1922. In cases where there is more than one edition and only one advertising rate is given it applies to each edition; combination rates are shown by brackets. In last column superior figure [1] following name indicates superintendent of job department only; superior figure [2], superintendent of mechanical department of newspaper and job department; no superior figure, superintendent of mechanical department of newspaper only. All quoted advertising rates are per agate line; where only one rate is quoted and no bracket appears it applies to each issue separately.

Explanation: Dagger (†) indicates morning newspapers. (m) indicates Sunday morning edition: (e) indicates Sunday evening edition. (I) politically independent; (R) Republican: (D) Democratic; (Soc.) Socialist; (I-R) Independent Republican; (I-D) Independent-Democratic. (J) operate job printing plants. (E) operate own engraving plant. * indicates rotogravure section. letter following indicates day of issue as S for Sunday, M for Monday, Tu for Tuesday, W for Wednesday, Th for Thursday, F for Friday, Sat for Saturday. Mo for monthly. Figures are key numbers to the list of special advertising representatives. Where more than one number is given, the first is East and the second West. (d) do not use mats. (t) do not use plates. Boldface circulation figures are A. B. C. net paid, six months statement ending September 30, 1922: X indicates three month statement ending September 30, 1922; Y indicates three months' A. B. C. statement ending June 30, 1922; W indicates A. B. C. audit of September 30, 1922. All other circulation figures are Government statements for six months ending September 30, 1922. In cases where there is more than one edition and only one advertising rate is given it applies to each edition; combination rates are shown by brackets. In last column superior figure 1 following name indicates superintendent of job department only; superior figure 2, superintendent of mechanical department of newspaper and job department; no superior figure, superintendent of mechanical department of newspaper only. All quoted advertising rates are per agate line; where only one rate is quoted and no bracket appears it applies to each issue separately.

Explanation: Dagger (†) indicates morning newspapers. (m) indicates Sunday morning edition; (e) indicates Sunday evening edition. (I) politically independent; (R) Republican; (D) Democratic; (Soc.) Socialist; (I-R) Independent Republican; (I-D) Independent-Democratic. (J) operate job printing plants. (E) operate own engraving plant. * indicates rotogravure section, letter following indicates day of issue as S for Sunday, M for Monday, Tu for Tuesday, W for Wednesday, Th for Thursday, F for Friday, Sat for Saturday. Mo for monthly. Figures are key numbers to the list of special advertising representatives. Where more than one number is given, the first is East and the second West. (d) do not use mats. (t) do not use plates. Boldface circulation figures are A. B. C. net paid, six months statement ending September 30, 1922; X indicates three month statement ending September 30, 1922; Y indicates three months' A. B. C. statement ending June 30, 1922; W indicates A. B. C. audit of September 30, 1922. All other circulation figures are Government statements for six months ending September 30, 1922. In cases where there is more than one edition and only one advertising rate is given it applies to each edition; combination rates are shown by brackets. In last column superior figure [1] following name indicates superintendent of job department only; superior figure [2], superintendent of mechanical department of newspaper and job department; no superior figure, superintendent of mechanical department of newspaper only. All quoted advertising rates are per agate line; where only one rate is quoted and no bracket appears it applies to each issue separately.

Explanation: Dagger (†) indicates morning newspapers. (m) indicates Sunday morning edition; (e) indicates Sunday evening edition. (I) politically independent; (R) Republican; (D) Democratic; (Soc.) Socialist; (I-R) Independent Republican; (I-D) Independent-Democratic. (J) operate job printing plants. (E) operate own engraving plant. * indicates rotogravure section, letter following indicates day of issue as S for Sunday, M for Monday, Tu for Tuesday, W for Wednesday, Th for Thursday, F for Friday, Sat for Saturday. Mo for monthly. Figures are key numbers to the list of special advertising representatives. Where more than one number is given, the first is East and the second West. (d) do not use mats. (t) do not use plates. Boldface circulation figures are A. B. C. net paid, six months statement ending September 30, 1922; X indicates three month statement ending September 30, 1922; Y indicates three months' A. B. C. statement ending June 30, 1922; W indicates A. B. C. audit of September 30, 1922. All other circulation figures are Government statements for six months ending September 30, 1922. In cases where there is more than one edition and only one advertising rate is given it applies to each edition; combination rates are shown by brackets. In last column superior figure 1 following name indicates superintendent of job department only; superior figure 2, superintendent of mechanical department of newspaper and job department; no superior figure, superintendent of mechanical department of newspaper only. All quoted advertising rates are per agate line; where only one rate is quoted and no bracket appears it applies to each issue separately.

Explanation: Dagger (†) indicates morning newspapers. (m) indicates Sunday morning edition; (e) indicates Sunday evening edition. (I) politically independent; (R) Republican; (D) Democratic; (Soc.) Socialist; (I-R) Independent Republican, (I-D) Independent-Democratic. (J) operate job printing plants. (E) operate own engraving plant. * indicates rotogravure section, letter following indicates day of issue as S for Sunday, M for Monday, Tu for Tuesday, W for Wednesday, Th for Thursday, F for Friday, Sat for Saturday. Mo for monthly. Figures are key numbers to the list of special advertising representatives. Where more than one number is given, the first is East and the second West. (d) do not use mats. (t) do not use plates. Boldface circulation figures are A. B. C. net paid, six months statement ending September 30, 1922; X indicates three month statement ending September 30, 1922; Y indicates three months' A. B. C. statement ending June 30, 1922; W indicates A. B. C. audit of September 30, 1922. All other circulation figures are Government statements for six months ending September 30, 1922. In cases where there is more than one edition and only one advertising rate is given it applies to each edition; combination rates are shown by brackets. In last column superior figure [1] following name indicates superintendent of job department only; superior figure [2], superintendent of mechanical department of newspaper and job department; no superior figure, superintendent of mechanical department of newspaper only. All quoted advertising rates are per agate line; where only one rate is quoted and no bracket appears it applies to each issue separately.

Explanation: Dagger (†) indicates morning newspapers. (m) indicates Sunday morning edition; (e) indicates Sunday evening edition. (I) politically independent; (R) Republican; (D) Democratic; (Soc.) Socialist; (I-R) Independent Republican; (I-D) Independent-Democratic. (J) operate job printing plants. (E) operate own engraving plant. * indicates rotogravure section, letter following indicates day of issue as S for Sunday, M for Monday, Tu for Tuesday, W for Wednesday, Th for Thursday, F for Friday, Sat for Saturday. Mo for monthly. Figures are key numbers to the list of special advertising representatives. Where more than one number is given, the first is East and the second West. (d) do not use mats. (t) do not use plates. Boldface circulation figures are A. B. C. net paid, six months statement ending September 30, 1922; X indicates three month statement ending September 30, 1922; Y indicates three months' A. B. C. statement ending June 30, 1922; W indicates A. B. C. audit of September 30, 1922. All other circulation figures are Government statements for six months ending September 30, 1922. In cases where there is more than one edition and only one advertising rate is given it applies to each edition; combination rates are shown by brackets. In last column superior figure [1] following name indicates superintendent of job department only; superior figure [2], superintendent of mechanical department of newspaper and job department; no superior figure, superintendent of mechanical department of newspaper only. All quoted advertising rates are per agate line; where only one rate is quoted and no bracket appears it applies to each issue separately.

Explanation: Dagger (†) indicates morning newspapers. (m) indicates Sunday morning edition; (e) indicates Sunday evening edition. (I) politically independent; (R) Republican; (D) Democratic; (Soc.) Socialist; (I-R) Independent Republican; (I-D) Independent-Democratic. (J) operate job printing plants. (E) operate own engraving plant. * indicates rotogravure section, letter following indicates day of issue as S for Sunday, M for Monday, Tu for Tuesday, W for Wednesday, Th for Thursday, F for Friday, Sat for Saturday. Mo for monthly. Figures are key numbers to the list of special advertising representatives. Where more than one number is given, the first is East and the second West. (d) do not use mats. (t) do not use plates. Boldface circulation figures are A. B. C. net paid, six months statement ending September 30, 1922; X indicates three month statement ending September 30, 1922; Y indicates three months' A. B. C. statement ending June 20, 1922; W indicates A. B. C. audit of September 30, 1922. All other circulation figures are Government statements for six months ending September 30, 1922. In cases where there is more than one edition and only one advertising rate is given it applies to each edition; combination rates are shown by brackets. In last column superior figure [1] following name indicates superintendent of job department only; superior figure [2], superintendent of mechanical department of newspaper and job department; no superior figure, superintendent of mechanical department of newspaper only. All quoted advertising rates are per agate line; where only one rate is quoted and no bracket appears it applies to each issue separately.

Explanation: Dagger (†) indicates morning newspapers. (m) indicates Sunday morning edition; (e) indicates Sunday evening edition. (I) politically independent; (R) Republican; (D) Democratic; (Soc.) Socialist; (I-R) Independent Republican; (I-D) Independent-Democratic. (J) operate job printing plants. (E) operate own engraving plant. * indicates rotogravure section, letter following indicates day of issue as S for Sunday, M for Monday, Tu for Tuesday, W for Wednesday, Th for Thursday, F for Friday, Sat for Saturday. Mo for monthly. Figures are key numbers to the list of special advertising representatives. Where more than one number is given, the first is East and the second West. (d) do not use mats. (t) do not use plates. Boldface circulation figures are A. B. C. net paid, six months statement ending September 30, 1922; X indicates three month statement ending September 30, 1922; Y indicates three months' A. B. C. statement ending June 20, 1922; W indicates A. B. C. audit of September 30, 1922. All other circulation figures are Government statements for six months ending September 30, 1922. In cases where there is more than one edition and only one advertising rate is given it applies to each edition; combination rates are shown by brackets. In last column superior figure [1] following name indicates superintendent of job department only; superior figure [2], superintendent of mechanical department of newspaper and job department; no superior figure, superintendent of mechanical department of newspaper only. All quoted advertising rates are per agate line; where only one rate is quoted and no bracket appears it applies to each issue separately.

Explanation: Dagger (†) indicates morning newspapers. (m) indicates Sunday morning edition; (e) indicates Sunday evening edition. (I) politically independent; (R) Republican; (D) Democratic; (Soc.) Socialist; (I-R) Independent Republican; (I-D) Independent-Democratic. (J) operate job printing plants. (E) operate own engraving plant. * indicates rotogravure section, letter following indicates day of issue as S for Sunday, M for Monday, Tu for Tuesday, W for Wednesday, Th for Thursday, F for Friday, Sat for Saturday. Mo for monthly. Figures are key numbers to the list of special advertising representatives. Where more than one number is given, the first is East and the second West. (d) do not use mats. (t) do not use plates. Boldface circulation figures are A. B. C. net paid, six months statement ending September 30, 1922; X indicates three month statement ending September 30, 1922; Y indicates three months' A. B. C. statement ending June 20, 1922; W indicates A. B. C. audit of September 30, 1922. All other circulation figures are Government statements for six months ending September 30, 1922. In cases where there is more than one edition and only one advertising rate is given it applies to each edition; combination rates are shown by brackets. In last column superior figure [1] following name indicates superintendent of job department only; superior figure [2], superintendent of mechanical department of newspaper and job department; no superior figure, superintendent of mechanical department of newspaper only. All quoted advertising rates are per agate line; where only one rate is quoted and no bracket appears it applies to each issue separately.

NOTE: Key numbers and letters in first column refer to similar numbers and letters in Newspaper Directories of the United States and Canada. The name of the advertising representative of every newspaper is indicated by this means, the two lists connecting up together.

Canadian representatives are listed in Special Canadian Section. See index on last two pag for location.

THE WORLD, as established by JOSEPH PULITZER, May 10, 1883:

"An institution that should always fight for progress and reform, never tolerate injustice or corruption, always fight demagogues of all parties, never belong to any party, always oppose privileged classes and public plunderers, never lack sympathy with the poor, always remain devoted to the public welfare, never be satisfied with merely printing news, always be drastically independent, never be afraid to attack wrong, whether by predatory plutocracy or predatory poverty."

A Word About The World

"First in Public Service"

THE NEW YORK WORLD is more than a first-class newspaper. It is the most independent, the most courageous and the most disinterested publication in the country. In the true sense of the word, it is the most ably edited paper in the United States. It is free; it is bold; it is scrupulously honest; it is the one paper in the United States that actually devotes itself to the Public Service.

THE WORLD does not believe that all the news that is fit to print is worth reading. It does not compete with volume, but excels in values. All essential occurrences THE WORLD presents in compact, accurate form. It is concerned with facts rather than with opinion or detail. A WORLD reader is more quickly, more deftly, more competently informed of what has happened to the world in the last twenty-four hours than is the reader of any other New York newspaper. What every man and woman wants to know, THE WORLD tells—and in the fewest possible words. This is the triumph of the art of able editing.

THE WORLD does not confuse virtue with dulness. It is written to be read. It is neither ponderous nor self-important. It tries to be right and is, most of the time, but is not afraid to admit error. It is interested in people and believes in humanity. It is friendly. It has common sense and a sense of humor. Therefore it is lively and entertaining. It is a sad day in which there are not several laughs in THE WORLD. It cherishes no grouches—it prefers to hope for the best.

THE WORLD is never content with merely giving the news. It conceives itself as the attorney for the People. It abhors injustice and dares expose it. It can be depended on to defend the oppressed. Its history is a catalogue of public services. Its reputation is founded on the fights it has made against the enemies of the common weal. The consistent foe of misgovernment and corruption, it is feared more by political tricksters and spoilsmen than any other journal in America.

THE WORLD is clean. It does not pander to vice or to crime. It is fair—it has neither friends nor foes in public places. It is earnest in its effort to be accurate in stating the facts of the news. It has no purpose to serve save to tell the truth. It is intrinsically honest and believes its integrity is conceded even by those it has attacked.

The characteristics set forth here are rare in an individual and still rarer in a newspaper. They are stated without boastfulness, for they are no more than a record of facts. They represent the spirit breathed into a journalistic entity by the ablest, most far-sighted personality that American journalism has produced. His thought, his message, have been held inviolate by his successors. THE WORLD is conducted by a group of men who are devoted to the ideals it stands for and whose hope is to be true to the faith that has been given them. WORLD men know that they serve a paper that is free and brave and they are proud of their connection with an institution that has no other cause to serve but Truth and the Right.

The Morning World

The best known of all American newspapers, with an international news service that has become world famed for its speed and accuracy.

Its Editorial page, under the direction of Frank I. Cobb, is the most trenchantly expressed in America.

Heywood Broun reviews books and plays and talks about things in general in a daily department called "It Seems to Me."

Franklin P. Adams (F. P. A.) conducts "The Conning Tower," the most brilliant daily column in newspaperdom.

S. S. Fontaine and Burton L. Read direct the most dependable financial department in the daily press.

George Daley covers the world of Sport; and the illustrated features include the masterly cartoons of Rollin Kirby and Frueh, "Mutt & Jeff," Fred Locher's "Cicero Sapp" and the inimitable "Metropolitan Movies" of Gene Carr.

The Sunday World

The best evidence of the popularity of THE SUNDAY WORLD is the fact that it has the largest Sunday morning circulation in New York.

In the first place, it is a complete newspaper, with a grasp of world events unrivalled in scope and authority.

THE WORLD MAGAZINE is a 16 to 24 page supplement printed in four colors and filled with the best fiction and most absorbing special articles obtainable.

THE WORLD GRAVURE is a picture section of surpassing beauty, printed in a special process and replete with the most interesting pictures of the day.

The "Metropolitan Section" is a brilliantly conceived review of New York life, illustrated by Herb Roth and other artists of note.

THE SUNDAY WORLD comic section in colors is a rib-tickling laugh from first to last page.

The Evening World

Long recognized as "the favored evening paper of New York homes," THE EVENING WORLD occupies a place peculiarly its own among the newspapers of Greater New York.

Its manifold features include many of the most successful regular departments in American journalism.

Through its editorial page have been waged some of the most important battles fought in the public's behalf, and the cartoons of John Cassel enjoy a nation-wide popularity.

Its special writers include Sophie Irene Loeb, Bide Dudley, Neal O'Hara, Roy L. McCardell, Marguerite Mooers Marshall, Charles Darnton and a host of other names well known to newspaperdom.

Its "comics" are tested laughmakers, produced by such humorists as Maurice Ketten, Counihan, Kling, "Vic" and Brinkerhoff.

How to Torture Your Wife —By Webster.

Webster, "Mark Twain of Cartoonists," Joins the Staff of The World

WEBSTER now joins THE WORLD. Newspaper and magazine readers the length and breadth of America have chuckled over "How to Torture Your Wife," have felt the deep human sympathy in "Life's Darkest Moment," have turned back the years to childhood's hour with "The Thrill That Comes Once in a Lifetime," and have enjoyed many a rib-tickling laugh over "Poker Portraits," "The Beginning of a Beautiful Friendship," "The Old Man" and others numbered among the best series of sustained humor in the press of the country. Webster joins a staff already famous as including:

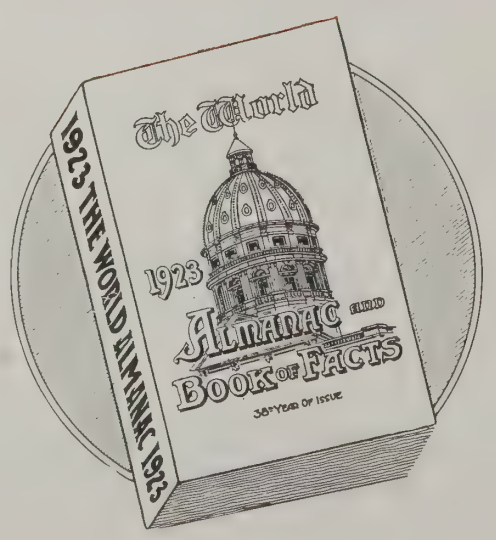
MERCHANDISING DEPARTMENT

Note:

This 78-page book is the most complete discussion of the merchandising problems that face the New York advertiser ever issued by a local newspaper. Copies may be had without charge by addressing the Merchandising Department of "The World."

THE MERCHANDISING SERVICE maintained by "THE WORLD" has been accepted as the standard of merchandising practice by the newspaper Committee of the National Association of Newspaper Executives on Advertising Agency relations .

Broadly comprehensive in its scope, it has successfully functioned in guiding many of the country's largest advertisers not alone in their preliminary investigations of the New York market, but in their subsequent moves in securing adequate distribution in this rich field.



The Merchandising Department places a staff of experts at the service of the advertiser who contemplates entering America's largest area of retail sales, fortified with an experience gained by scores of careful industrial surveys of the principal buying centers of the city.

THE WORLD ALMANAC

THE WORLD ALMANAC has been called "the most frequently consulted work of reference after the dictionary." Its fame has been well-earned by a record for infallibility extending over thirty-eight years.

The 1923 volume, just issued, contains reference to 50,000 facts covering every phase of contemporary life, so cross-indexed as to be immediately available for instant use.

It includes authoritative information covering questions of the moment, such as the Bonus, the New Tariff, the Irish Free State, Naval Disarmament, the European Debt to this country, recent election results and the latest moves in the Labor world.

Heavy Paper Cover
35c—By Mail, 50c
Cloth Bound Copies
75c—By Mail, 90c

Full population statistics, the Year in Finance, in Commerce, in Sports, in Government, in Education are all treated with a degree of thoroughness found in no other annual publication of the kind.

The World Almanac is the busy man's encyclopedia. It is probably the most widely used reference work in the newspaper offices of the country, outside of the city telephone directory.

GRAVURE COVERAGE

(Figures in shaded areas indicate number of persons per acre)

A careful study of this chart indicates the concentration of the circulation of "The World Gravure" in those districts of MANHATTAN ISLAND which by reason of their degree of density of population are of most value to the advertiser.

For instance, there are three times as many copies of "The World Gravure" circulated in the extremely restricted districts East and West of Central Park, the centers of New York's wealth, than in the two vast lower East Side districts combined.

Over the whole of Manhattan Island, territory which "The Sunday World" rides with four other morning papers, he World" goes into one home in every ree, as indicated by a survey of the city.

In the Upper West Side, known as the chest Congressional District of Amer-," investigation shows the number of mes and the number of "Sunday orlds" delivered to be almost equal.

ne upper East Side, center of the city's alth, reveals a "World" to practically ery two homes.

In those sections of densest concentration population, we find a "World" in every en to fifteen homes.

Advertisers who have analyzed the posi-n of "The World Gravure" in covering w York efficiently are directly responsi- for a gain of 40% in the advertising ried by "The World Gravure" during 22 over the year previous.

IF CONCENTRATION directly within the limits of New York City means anything to the advertiser—and it should be one of his uppermost considerations—then "The World Gravure" is entitled to first place among the gravure sections of the city.

Not only has it a larger circulation than any other standard-sized gravure section in the country, but directly in Greater New York, within daily contact with its shops, "The World Gravure" has—

16% more circulation than its three Sunday morning competitors combined, purchasable at a saving of more than 82% in rate.

This brings the purchase of gravure space down to a simple matter of business economics, in which "The World Gravure" offers a service incomparably more effective in covering this well-defined territory, and at a rate designed to encourage the extensive use of this forceful medium of illustration.

Reference to the above chart showing the distribution of population on Manhattan Island, indicates more clearly than any available argument the domination of America's greatest area of retail sales by the

New York World Gravure

The World

NEW YORK

First in Gain!

THE YEAR 1922 found THE WORLD in practical domination of the greatest area of retail sales in America, so far as the growth of its advertising indicates its usefulness to the merchants of Greater New York.

Carrying a total lineage of 17,244,090, THE WORLD closed the year with a gain of 2,723,496 lines, an increase of approximately 19% over advertising carried during 1921. This increase is more than 233,000 lines in excess of the gain registered during the year by THE WORLD'S nearest competitor.

In the matter of individual transactions alone, an infallible test of a newspaper's contact with its public, THE WORLD set an enviable record, as the following table giving the number of separate advertisements run during the year will attest:

Separate Advertisements in 1922

	Advertisements Carried	The World's Lead
The World	1,712,181	.....
The Times	1,115,366	596,815
The Herald	431,695	1,280,486
The American	281,570	1,430,611
The Tribune	133,308	1,578,873

And during the year, THE WORLD increased its own lead over 1921 by printing 249,140 more advertisements, a sizable advertising business in itself. It is an achievement of no little importance to have served as the trusted intermediary in 1,712,181 separate transactions, each based upon belief in the ability of THE WORLD'S columns to produce results.

In the matter of gains in advertising lineage, the leadership of THE WORLD is even more apparent, as the following year-end comparison indicates:—

	Columns Gained	Columns Lost	The World's Advantage
The World	9,726.75	.....	.....
The Times	8,410.75	.....	1,316 columns
The American	3,058.75	.....	6,668 columns
The Herald	.....	511.25	10,238 columns
The Tribune	.....	421.25	10,148 columns

This gain in lineage came as the climax of a period during which, for eight consecutive months, THE WORLD outdistanced the fourteen newspapers of New York in advertising increases.

That it is indicative of a concerted move on the part of far-sighted advertisers to take full advantage of the highly concentrated service offered by THE WORLD and THE EVENING WORLD is further borne out by a gain of 53,41 lines registered by the latter paper in the month of Decembe alone.

By every standard of comparison common to advertising practice, these two newspapers offer the advertiser a value per dollar expended, unapproachable for effectiveness in the most conspicuously active market in the country.

KNOWN CIRCULATION

"EVERY DAY IN EVERY WAY"

Applied to business through the Advertising Columns of Newspapers, is working wonders

Gloomy discussion of "business conditions" some time back almost supplanted weather talk in conversational circles. Great as was the harm done, it is quickly being repaired.

A new era is dawning. Confidence and assuredness are developing to an amazing degree.

Strange as it may seem, the public's ability and willingness to absorb has exceeded the producers' sale and supply energy.

It takes tremendous buyer demand to overcome the inertia of seller timidity, but a bold, confident seller activity quickly sweeps away buyer hesitancy.

The manufacturer and the seller found it a bit difficult to get up speed again, but it is gaining every day, and we are further along Prosperity Road than many people realize. The advertising columns of newspapers not only reflect this condition, but have contributed greatly to it.

We firmly believe that those who have bravely and intelligently kept before the prospective buying public with telling advertising in the newspapers covering their markets are OUTDISTANCING COMPETITION.

We are the National Advertising Representatives of twenty progressive newspapers in that many fine cities of the United States.

We are equipped to lay before any interested advertiser or advertising agency a vast amount of up-to-the-minute information regarding the market opportunities and publicity advantages of those cities, whenever and wherever you say.

Should you change representation

—Please consider our list is composed entirely of papers of character and known value—noted for their reliability.

To be associated with such papers gives standing and prestige.

We are never in the unfortunate position where weak papers have to be pushed at the expense of the strong.

There is room here for two more newspapers that want high efficiency service and the increased lineage that goes with strong association, and aggressive representation.

Our list is:—

	Circulation
Spokane, Wash., Spokesman-Review	43,321 51,131	(Daily) (Sunday)	The dominant morning and Sunday newspaper in the prosperous Spokane Country
Spokane, Wash., Chronicle	37,629		The dominant evening paper in this wonderfully prosperous field
Boise, Idaho, Statesman	14,491 14,958	(Daily) (Sunday)	The dominant paper of Boise and of Idaho
Fresno, Calif., Republican	30,577 31,645	(Daily) (Sunday)	The dominant paper of Fresno and Central California's eight great counties
Montreal, Canada, La Presse	146,392		The dominant evening newspaper of Montreal, French or English, and the Province of Quebec with over 30,000 more circulation than any other newspaper published in Canada.

Twenty-five years in the field—a wide acquaintance east and west—well covered territory.

Four solicitors for five newspapers—individual service.

No billing and collecting. Our motto is "Dual sales work—with advertiser and agency."

Write or wire. Full particulars furnished without incurring obligations.

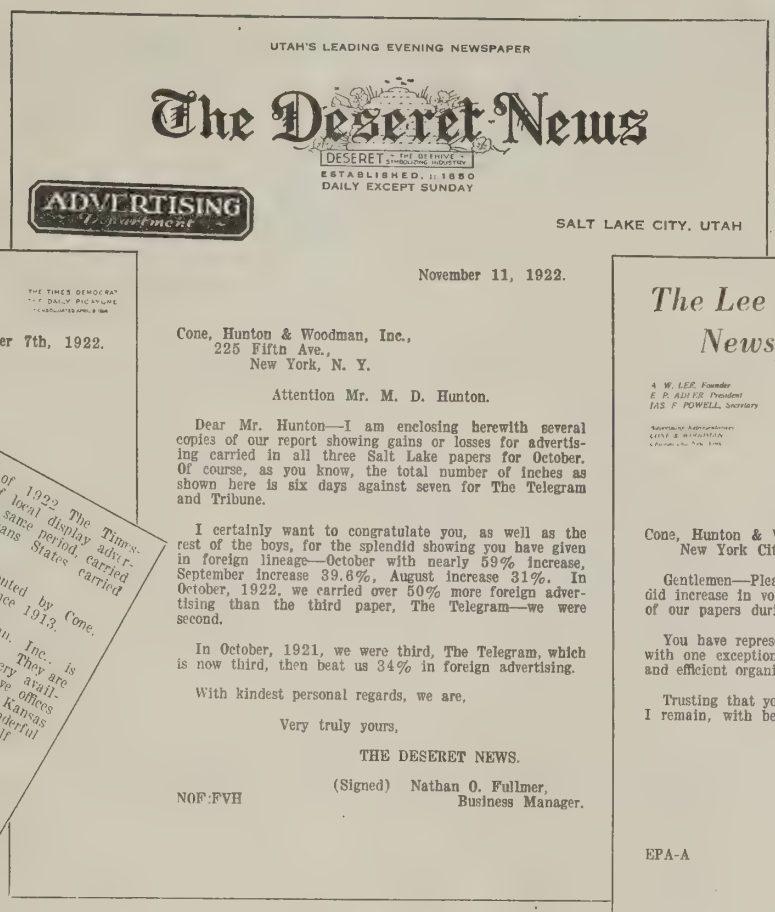
RESULTS COUNT

The Times-Picayune
NEW ORLEANS
SECOND PORT.U.S.A

December 7th, 1922.



During the first nine months of 1922 The Times-Picayune carried 6,242,231 lines of local display advertising, the New Orleans Item, for the same period, carried 5,321,734 lines, and the New Orleans States carried 4,366,315 lines.

The Times-Picayune has been represented by Cone, Hunton & Woodman in the foreign field since 1913.

We believe that Cone, Hunton & Woodman, Inc., is the liveliest organization in the country today: They are always on their toes, and manage to secure every available line of advertising in their field. They have offices in New York, Chicago, Detroit, Atlanta, St. Louis, Kansas City, as well as on the Pacific Coast. The wonderful showing that they are making for us speaks for itself

With best wishes, we are,

Yours very truly,
THE TIMES-PICAYUNE,
Nathan Bruen
Business Manager.

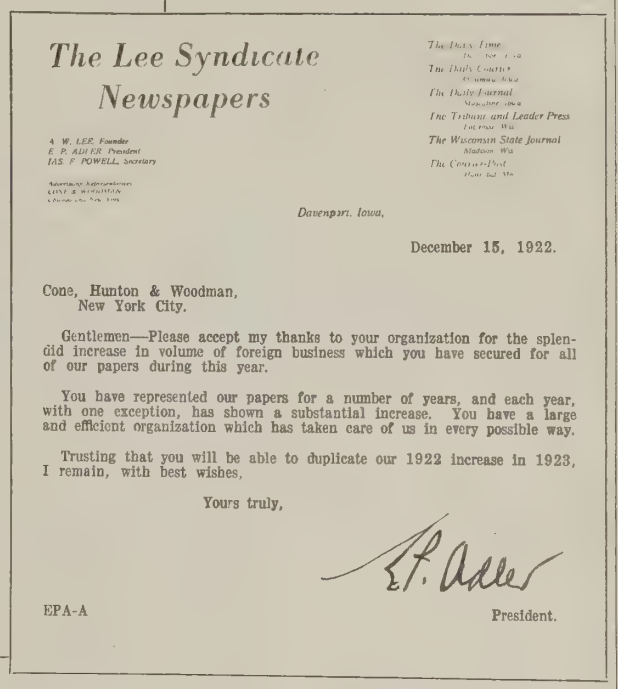
New York, N. Y.

Attention Mr. M. D. Hunton.

Dear Mr. Hunton—I am enclosing herewith several copies of our report showing gains or losses for advertising carried in all three Salt Lake papers for October. Of course, as you know, the total number of inches as shown here is six days against seven for The Telegram and Tribune.

I certainly want to congratulate you, as well as the rest of the boys, for the splendid showing you have given in foreign lineage—October with nearly 59% increase, September increase 39.6%, August increase 31%. In October, 1922, we carried over 50% more foreign advertising than the third paper, The Telegram—we were second.

In October, 1921, we were third, The Telegram, which is now third, then beat us 34% in foreign advertising.



With kindest personal regards, we are,

Very truly yours,

THE DESERET NEWS.

Gentlemen—Please accept my thanks to your organization for the splendid increase in volume of foreign business which you have secured for all of our papers during this year.

You have represented our papers for a number of years, and each year, with one exception, has shown a substantial increase. You have a large and efficient organization which has taken care of us in every possible way.

Trusting that you will be able to duplicate our 1922 increase in 1923, I remain, with best wishes,

Yours truly,

E. P. Adler

President.

THE SUPREMACY IN NATIONAL ADVERTISING which we are obtaining for the above and other newspapers we have the honor to represent is based on:

Our methods of analyzing markets and showing how the circulation of the newspapers we represent grips those markets

plus

An equipment of forceful solicitors operating from seven offices covering the entire country, and an unusual department of co-operation

plus

Work—Intelligent, Indefatigable, Never-let-up Work

IF you are not getting the results we are giving the newspapers we represent—

IF your market, and the buying power of your circulation with its influence in the community are not being sold to advertisers—

IF you believe in up-to-date business methods applied to securing National advertising in this modern business age and want

Work, Effective Work, More Work Behind Your Newspaper

THEN we shall be glad to discuss representation with you.

CIRCULATIONS AND ADVERTISING RATES OF 2,033 U. S. ENGLISH LANGUAGE DAILIES

Ninth Semi-Annual Listing by Editor & Publisher Also Includes 546 Sunday Newspapers, and All Dailies of Canada—Circulations as of Oct. 1, 1922—Rates Checked to Jan. 22, 1923

RECOVERY from the hard times of war and after-war periods has been more marked in the newspaper business in the past six months than at any time since 1918. There were five more newspapers published in the morning on January 22, 1923, than there were on May 15, 1922, when the lists closed on the last tabulation by EDITOR & PUBLISHER. There were 11 more evening newspapers and there were three more Sunday newspapers. The grand total of morning, evening and Sunday newspapers is 19 more than for the previous period. This is the first tabulation of the nine that have been published in which the number of morning papers shows an increase, and it marks the largest increase in the number of evening newspapers that has been noted.

Circulations of all morning, evening and Sunday newspapers totaled as of October 1, 1922, 49,384,666 copies per issue, an increase of 469,891 copies, or 1.07 per cent. There are listed 426 morning papers, 1,607 evening papers and 546 Sunday papers, a total of 2,579 issues. Other data given in the "Ready Reckoner for Space-Buyers" on the following page includes the advertising rates, by states, of morning, evening, combined morning and evening, and Sunday papers, the circulations by states of each of these classes, comparative summaries for semi-annual periods for the past two years, similar summaries, by provinces, for the Dominion of Canada and for the Territories of the United States.

United States circulations are taken from reports to the Audit Bureau of Circulations for the six months' period ending October 1, 1922, or from publishers' statements to the U. S. Postoffice for the same period. Canadian circulations are from reports to the A. B. C. or sworn statements by publishers.

Advertising rates are taken from statements by publishers to EDITOR & PUBLISHER and have been corrected to January 22, 1923. The rates given are the minimum charges per agate line on local and on national advertising, and the conslusions in the Ready Reckoner are based only on the latter. Local rates have never been tabulated before and it has not been possible to prepare in time for publication in EDITOR & PUBLISHER INTERNATIONAL YEAR BOOK an analysis comparing local and national charges.

On this page appears a box entitled "Basic Facts for the Buyers and Sellers of Newspaper Advertising Space," analyzing and comparing the number of morning, evening and Sunday newspapers, with circulations, joint minimum advertising rates, and rates per line per million circulation, as of December 31, 1922; May 15, 1922; November 15, 1921; May 15, 1921, and November 15, 1920.

U. S. Morning Papers

Morning papers, according to this summary, increased between April 1, 1922, and December 31, 1922, from 421 to 426. Their net paid circulation on October 1, 1922, was 10,809,619 copies per issue. Their joint minimum advertising rate was $27,529. This circulation was an increase of 510,374 copies, 40 states showing an increase over their last previous totals and the other nine (including the District of Columbia) showing negligible declines. Of this increase, over 100,000 copies were accounted for in New York city.

The joint minimum national advertising rate increased $1,258 over the May 15 total for morning papers, and $1,577 over the total on November 15, 1921.

U. S. Evening Papers

Evening papers increased from 1,596 on April 1, 1922, to 1,607. Their circulations showed a slight decrease, due to the facts that several important consolidations and suspensions have taken effect in the past six months and that the resultant circulation from these changes and from the establishment of new evening papers in a number of large cities will not appear on official reports until April 1. The decrease shown by the present listing is 1,098 copies per day. Small losses are shown from the April 1 figures by 23 states and gains by 26.

Joint minimum advertising rates for evening papers rose to $63,116, an increase over the May 15 rate of $2,061, and an increase of $3,107 over the rate on November 15, 1921.

U. S. Sunday Newspapers

Sunday newspapers, numbering 546 on January 22, show an increase of three since the last listing. Their circulation averaged 19,676,725 net paid copies per issue and their joint minimum advertising rate was $45,829 per agate line.

Circulations of large Middle Western and Eastern Sunday newspapers are now in process of adjustment—particularly the Hearst New York and Chicago Sunday papers, which have cut down their distribution in territory covered by new Hearst enterprises whose totals do not yet appear in reports. The decrease in Sunday circulation from the total for the April 1 period is 39,385 copies, all of which is accounted for in this manner. Thirty states show healthy gains in Sunday circulation, one of these (New Hampshire) having a Sunday paper for the first time since these records have been kept, and 18, including New York and Illinois, show losses. Losses in circulation shown for evening and Sunday newspapers are, therefore, technical and, if the figures were available, these classifications would appear as having made substantial gains over their totals of last Spring.

Sunday joint advertising rates increased $1.412 over May 15 and $1.576 over November 15, 1921.

U. S. Morning and Evening Papers

Morning and evening newspapers totaled 2,033, an increase of 16 over the May 15 totals. Their circulations amounted to 29,707,941 copies a day and their joint advertising rate was $90.645. Six months ago these papers had 29,198,665 copies and a joint minimum advertising rate of $87.326 per line. As of November 15, 1921, there were 2,028 morning and evening papers, circulating 28,423,740 copies, at a joint rate of $86.051 per line.

U. S. Daily and Sunday Papers

Combined morning, evening and Sunday newspapers now number 2,579, almost up to the high water mark of the post-war period—2,584. There are 19 more than there were six months ago and 6 more than a year ago, which would seem to indicate that the birth rate is again ahead of the death rate for the daily press. Total circulations also set a new high mark—higher than that of the war era—and, with new dailies in large cities making their first statements next April 1, the tenth listing by EDITOR & PUBLISHER should show the fruition of some healthy gains that are now being nourished in all three classes. The present total, as it is, is almost 2,000,000 copies per issue ahead of the showing in October, 1921.

This gain of approximately 4 per cent in circulation fully warrants the increase noted in total advertising rates—$6.17, or a trifle less than 4 per cent. Increases in rate have been more frequent during the past three months—effective January 1, 1923—than since 1920, but they have been small increases fully justified by circulation growth and made necessary by steady rises in the cost of newspaper production. The general level of newsprint contract prices is about 7 per cent higher than it was a year ago and wages to mechanical forces, as weekly notes in EDITOR & PUBLISHER have shown, are either definitely higher than they were a year ago in most cities or approximately the same. Prospects of rising cost of living during the next few months face the newspapers with additions to their payrolls in the form of scale increases or temporary bonuses.

Canadian Newspapers

Canadian newspapers are tabulated separately from the United States publications. There are 118 morning, evening and Sunday newspapers, of which 26 are morning, 85 are evening and 7 are Sunday. This is a decrease from the listing as of May 15 of 1 morning paper and 5 evening papers. Circulations total, morning, evening and Sunday, 2,025,822 copies per issue, the major portion of this circulation being audited by the A. B. C. This is a decrease of 4,106 copies, but, like the similar decreases in the United States, it is technical rather than actual, as the results of changes in several fields, which would have been more than enough to overcome this loss, do not yet appear in the statements to the A. B. C.

Morning circulations are now 492,399 copies, against 500,478 copies six months ago. Evening circulations are 1,262,984 copies, against 1,262,511 copies as of April 1. Sunday circulations are 270,439 copies per issue, compared with 266,939 copies in the previous listing.

Combined minimum advertising rates of morning, evening and Sunday newspapers total $5.332. The rate for the 26 morning papers with their 492,399 circulation is $1.401. The rate for the 112 evening papers with the 1,262,984 copies per day is $3,326. The rate for the seven Sunday papers, with 270,439 circulation per day, is $0.605. Six months ago, the 27 morning papers had a combined rate of $1.446, the 91 evening papers sold for $3.497, while the seven Sunday papers had a joint rate of $0.593. This is a decrease of 4.5 cents in the morning rate, a decrease of 17.1 cents in the evening rate, and an increase of 1.2 cents in the Sunday rate.

Rate per line per million circulation of Canadian morning papers is now $2.84, a decrease of 4 cents from the previous total. Evening papers now circulate one agate line one million times for $2.63, against $2.77 six months ago. Sunday rate per line per million is now $2.23, against $2.22 in May.

Milline Rates

Returning to the United States dailies, we find that advertisers, with the greatest volume of daily and Sunday circulation that has ever been placed at their disposal, are paying less per line per million for it than they were two years ago. In other words, according to the recognized standard of measurement of the cost of newspaper space, it is cheaper now than it was two years after the war ended. Since October 1, 1920, newspaper circulations, daily and Sunday, have raised their totals from 44,874,260 copies per day to 49,384,666 copies. Their joint advertising rates have risen from $125.725 to $136.474 per agate line. Their charge for putting an agate line into circulation one million times in November, 1920, was $2.801. It is now $2.757, a decrease of 4.4 cents, or 1.56 per cent.

Morning paper rates per line per million circulation are lower now than at any time during the past two years. Their circulation since October 1, 1920, has risen from 9,827,775 net paid per day to 10,809,619 copies net paid per day, a gain of 981,844 copies, or 9.9 per cent. In the meantime their advertising rates have risen only from $26.141 to $27.529, an advance of $1.388 cents, or a trifle over 5 per cent. Their milline rate has dropped from $2.659 two years ago to $2.523, a decrease of 13.6 cents, or 5.11 per cent.

Calculations based on available evening paper circulation figures do not represent the truth, for the reasons given above. As it stands now, evening papers have a milline rate of $3.339, an increase of 10.9 cents, or 3.36 per cent over their figure of six months ago, and an increase of 23.4 cents, or 7.53 per cent over their rate of two years ago. To arrive at a true basis of comparison it would be necessary to omit from consideration all advertising rates of new or consolidated newspapers whose circulations are not yet officially recorded, and to do this on every tabulation for every period for which comparisons were desired. Obviously, the labor and expenditure of time entailed in this task would be too great for compensation by the nearer approach to accuracy that the method would secure.

The same is true of the figures for Sunday papers, of which a number were started during the six months ending October 1, or thereafter. Even with the lack of full circulation figures to offset the increases in advertising rates by the addition of new papers, the total rate per line per million is lower than it was two years ago by 7.6 cents, or 3.16 per cent. Then Sunday circulations totaled 17,083,604 copies per issue. Now, with the figures available, a total of 19,676,725 copies is shown. This is an increase of 2,593,121 copies, or 15.1 per cent.

Advertising rates of Sunday newspapers in the meantime have risen from $41.107 to $45.829, an increase of 11.4 per cent. For the reasons stated, the milline rate appears higher now than it was six months ago, but even at that, it is ridiculously low—$2.329.

Taking the October, 1922 figures in comparison with those for October, 1921, it is possible to draw a picture in truer perspective. Morning papers for that period show an increase in net paid circulation of 665,359 copies, or 6.6 per cent. Their advertising rates have increased from $25.952 to $27.529—$1.477, or 5.6 per cent. Their milline rate has dropped from $2.558 to $2.523—3.5 cents, or 1.37 per cent.

Evening paper circulations have increased in the twelve-month period from 18,279,480 copies per day to the nominal figure of 18,898,322 copies—actually the figure should be 100,000 copies per day over that mark. The gain is 618,842 copies, or 3.4 per cent. Their advertising rates have advanced from $60.009 to $63.116, an increase of $3.107, or 5.1 per cent. Their milline rate has increased from $3.287 to $3.339, a gain of 5.2 cents, or 1.58 per cent.

Sunday circulations have increased in the year from 19,041,415 copies to the nominal figure of 19,676,725 copies, a gain of 635,312 copies, or 3.3 per cent. Their advertising rates have increased from $44.253 to $45.829, an advance of $1.576, or 3.6 per cent. Their milline rate has increased from $2.324 to $2.329, a raise of half a cent, or one-fifth of one per cent.

It is therefore safe to conclude that there have been no inordinate increases in newspaper advertising costs in the past year, that in fact, with full data available, a decrease might be shown. Service to reader and to advertiser is now being rendered with a closer eye to results and a looser hold on the newspaper purse-strings than at any time in recent years.

NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING MAKES THE LINE STRAIGHT BETWEEN FACTORY AND CONSUMER

Comparison of Circulations and Advertising Rates of 2,033 Daily and 546 Sunday Newspapers, With Those of 47 Monthly, Weekly, Women's and Class Magazines, Analyzed by Distribution in Territorial Market Groups.

THE best buy in advertising is now, as it was five years ago, the daily newspaper published in the American city and town. Despite all the radical changes and developments that the five years since the war era have brought to American journalism, with costs that soared vertically and remained at their new altitude, the daily newspaper continues to supply not only the best, but the cheapest form of business announcement.

This cannot be challenged. The facts to support it are reproduced on the following pages in the form of tabular listing of the circulations in territorial markets of daily newspapers and the leading general, women's, class and weekly magazines. The material for these tables was gathered and compiled by EDITOR & PUBLISHER working in co-operation with the Bureau of Advertising of the American Newspaper Publisher Association. It is a pleasure to acknowledge that the assistance rendered by this organizations and its director and associate director, Messrs. William A. Thomson and Thomas H. Moore, has been invaluable in getting this matter into form for reproduction in EDITOR & PUBLISHER INTERNATIONAL YEAR BOOK.

Before going into details as to what is shown by the appended figures, the reader may judge of the scope of the investigation and the value of the data from the following brief particulars:

The newspaper list includes 426 morning papers, 1,607 evening newspapers and 546 Sunday papers. These are the newspapers regularly listed by EDITOR & PUBLISHER since 1918 in its semi-annual tabulations of newspaper circulations and rates. Business dailies are not included in the totals given. College newspapers are also excluded. We are discussing the bona fide regular daily newspapers which are delivered to American homes or readers every day in the year. The circulations of these newspapers are those given to the U. S. Government or the Audit Bureau of Circulation for the six months ending September 30, 1922—over 80 per cent of the circulation listed is audited by the A. B. C. The rates are the minimum charges on foreign advertising in force for these newspapers on January 1, 1923.

Forty-seven magazines are included in the periodical tables. There are 21 general magazines, monthlies with one exception, which has two issues a month. There are 11 magazines which appeal especially to women readers. There are seven trade or class magazines and there are eight weeklies. The circulations of all but one—the Literary Digest—are taken from A. B. C. reports, the latest available, and covering some part of 1922. The circulation of the Literary Digest is taken from an audited statement prepared by that publication for a year's period ending April 15, 1922. Rates are those effective on January 1, 1923.

Comparison of this kind was first made by EDITOR & PUBLISHER early in 1919, with late 1918 statistics as a working basis. The newspaper circulations at that time were at the peak, due to the demand for war news during the summer of 1918. Newspaper rates, on the other hand, were extremely low, for wages had barely begun their upward climb, which has not yet stopped, and print paper was selling at slightly more than $70 a ton. The magazine circulations of their period were less affected by the war than those of the newspapers and their rates had been fairly stable on a plane far above the newspaper level for a number of years. In the years between, costs on both newspapers and magazines have risen tremendously and have fluctuated so violently as to prevent until now any accurate comparison.

When the previous calculations were made the situation could have been put briefly as follows:

Publications	Circulations.	Agate Line Rates.	Milline Rates.
21 General magazines	6,184,658	$38.55	$6.233
11 Women's mags...	9,233,805	49.80	5.393
7 Class magazines..	1,101,242	8.20	7.446
8 Weeklies.....	4,451,847	26.35	5.918
47 Magazines.....	20,971,552	122.90	5.860
519 Morning papers.	10,271,137	19.208	1.870
1647 Evening papers.	18,353,904	42.532	2.317
503 Sunday papers..	16,056,580	26.811	1.666

At the beginning of 1923 the situation had changed materially. There are fewer newspapers, but the smaller number had more circulation than their more numerous brethren had during the feverish days of war. And rates are higher all around. Several of the magazines listed in the former tabulation have fallen before Father Time and their places are taken in the list by others whose circulation and advertising volume was as near as possible to those which were lost. In no case was the compiler's leaning toward the newspaper as an advertising medium permitted to influence him in the choice of substitutes. Every "break" that was given went to increase the total of the class of publication being listed.

From the tables on the following pages these high spots can be taken:

Publications	Circulation.	Agate Line Rates.	Milline Rates.
21 General magazines	6,797,204	$54.55	$8.025
11 Women's mags...	11,325,712	69.75	6.158
7 Class magagines..	1,018,805	9.85	9.668
8 Weekly magazines.	5,892,397	34.00	5.770
47 Magazines.....	25,034,178	168.15	6.716

546 Sunday papers..	19,712,874	45.829	2.324

Here is a convenient take-off—the combined circulations and rates of all newspapers and all magazines for the periods ending in the fall of 1918 and the fall of 1922.

Magazine circulation increased in that period from 20,971,552 copies per issue to 25,034,178 copies per issue—4,062,626 copies per issue, of 19.3 per cent.

Daily newspaper circulation increased from 28,624,041 net paid daily to 29,780,328 copies per day—1,156,273 copies net paid, or 4.9 per cent.

Sunday circulation increased from 16,056,580 copies to 19,712,874 copies net paid per issue—3,656,294 copies, or 22.9 per cent.

Magazine agate line rates increased from a total of $122.90 to $168.15—$49.25 per agate line or 36.8 per cent.

Daily newspaper combined advertising rates increased from $61.74 to $90.645—$28.905, or 46.8 per cent.

Sunday newspaper advertising rates increased from $26.811 to $45.829—$19.018, or 70 per cent.

Magazine rates per agate line per million circulation increased from $5.860 to $6.716—$0.856, or 14.6 per cent.

Daily newspaper rates per line per million circulation increased from $2.157 to $3.033—$0.876, or 40 per cent.

Sunday newspaper rates per line per million increased from $1.666 to $2.324—$0.658, or 39 per cent.

The magazine circulation as of October, 1918, was 46.9 per cent of the newspaper circulation for that period; magazine circulation as of October, 1922, was 50.5 per cent of the newspaper circulation for the six months ending September 30, 1922.

Newspaper rates in the former tabulation were 72 per cent of the magazine tariffs; in the present tabulation, despite the tremendous increases which have borne on newspapers far more heavily than on magazines, they are only 81 per cent of the total magazine charges.

Newspaper milline rates in 1918 were 33.8 per cent of the magazine rate per line per million; in 1918, the newspapers put a line into circulation a million times for 41 per cent of what the magazines charged for the same service. And that's the big fact behind the initial statement that the newspaper is still the cheapest advertising medium known to American business. Its efficacy doesn't need to be defended any longer. Advertisers have supplied all the testimony needed by their steady migration into newspaper advertising during the past five years, the last of which was in many ways the biggest the newspaper ever enjoyed.

These comparisons could be carried on indefinitely, but that is not the purpose of this tabulation. Circulations are analyzed by market groups, which do not necessarily follow the divisions usually found in geographies. It is the aim of the Bureau of Advertising and of EDITOR & PUBLISHER to demonstrate by the actual circulation figures, without forcing any conclusions, that the daily newspapers cover their fields far more intensely than it is possible for any magazine to do and that the newspaper can introduce any product to any market at so low a cost that the magazines cannot approximate it.

Take, at random, the Central States market group, including the states of Illinois, Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Wisconsin and Iowa, where are resident more than 20 per cent of the population of the continental United States. There are 23,879,564 people, or roughly 6,000,000 families in this area. And there are 5,424,322 evening papers and 2,137,387 morning papers circulated every day—a total of 7,561,709 copies put out by 69 morning and 465 evening newspaper plants. That might conservatively be called saturated circulation.

Then take the magazine circulation in this area where native born Americans are probably more numerous than in any other thickly populated region, and it is found that 47 magazines—monthly, women's, weekly and class publications have a total of 6,113,314 copies. Of these magazines, the 21 general publications, whose names and detailed circulation for each state can be found in the table on page 11, circulate 1,504,080 copies per issue, or one to every four families. The eleven publications which appeal to women have a circulation of 2,969,997 copies, or one to every two families. The eight weeklies have 1,406,869 circulation, or less than one to every four families.

So much for the coverage. Now for the cost.

An advertiser who wanted one insertion in all of the 534 morning and evening papers would page for it $21.55 an agate line. If he used a 10,000-line campaign in these papers, his cost would be $215,500. This would enable him to use four full pages in each of these newspapers, or eight half pages, or sixteen quarter-pages. His cost is less than 4 cents to reach every family. If he uses quarter-page space, his cost is less than one-quarter of a cent for each of sixteen opportunities to present his message to his prospective customers.

But suppose that he is made to believe that the magazines have as effective coverage and that their greater opportunity for expensive art work will enhance his sales campaign. Suppose that he decided to use the list of 21 general magazines, eleven women's publications, and the eight weeklies—an ambitious list, to be sure, but not an impossible one. Let us assure that his product has a universal appeal—a new flour that can't fail to produce big, tasty pancakes—and that it lends itself well to color copy.

His space in the 21 monthly magazines, reaching 1,504,080 homes, would cost him $19,440 per page or $54.555 cents an agate line. Page copy would be the thing, of course, for fancy color copy—the dominant idea, you know. And equally, of course, one single page would be worthless — six pages is the minimum he could use with any chance of getting his bait back. And six pages in all of these magazines would set him back $116,640 for space alone, without considering the color charges, artists' fees, and incidentals. To reach his 1,504,080 homes with these magazines, his expense per family is over 7 cents. And he is covering only one-quarter of the field the newspapers cover for half the same expenditure per home. He is demanding the attention of his prospects usually only once during each month, possibly twice or three times, when he uses these 21 magazines.

He is competing with a volume of other advertising designed in striking and expensive colors and unless his copy is unusually striking—which as a rule means costly—there is an excellent chance that his advertising won't receive any attention. In his elegant magazine copy, he cannot tell the people he wants to use his flour that Reilly's Grocery Store on Fourth street has received a fresh stock and is ready to meet all demands and that his goods are packed as the lady of the house wants pancake flour packed and that his price can meet that of any goods of approximately equal quality in the local market. He can't send the customer to the store to ask for his product.

He can do these things in the newspapers. He can do them as elaborately as he wants to—in a three-liner on page one, or on the food page in a small card, or in a full page that cannot escape attention, or in pithy, well-prepared 200-line copy. The newspaper advertiser has an elastic medium. He can vary his copy on a few hours' notice to take advantage of changing conditions. Using the magazines, he makes his dispositions weeks ahead, months ahead in fact, and the spearhead that should drive his message home is dulled in the long period between preparation and publication. The newspaper word is sharp, keen and attention-compelling. And its cost is infinitesimal.

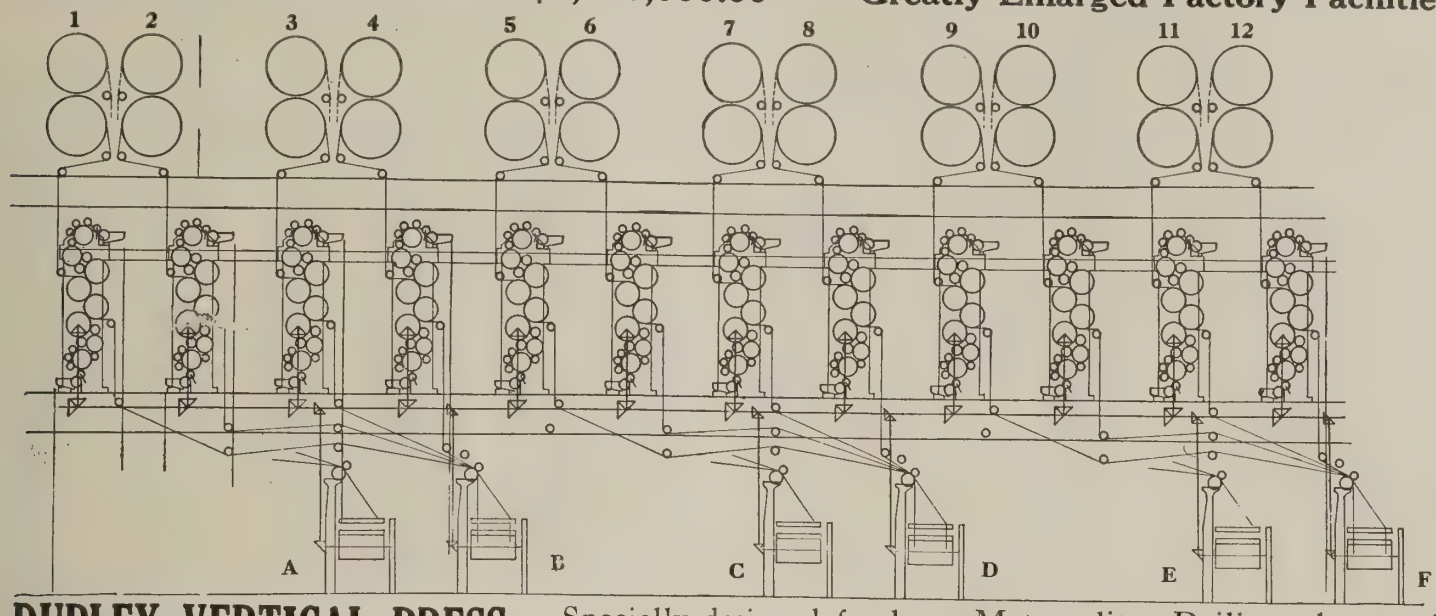
If the advertiser is convinced that monthly magazines are too infrequent a medium, he may be induced to use the list of eight weekly publications analyzed on one of the following pages. His circulation in the Central States market group is 1,406,869 copies per issue, or slightly less than the one copy to four families that the monthly magazines afford. His rate per page is $18,157 in all of the eight. His cost to reach each of these families on the weeklies' subscription lists with one page is about 1.3 cents per family. If he used one page a month in each of these publications, his total cost would be $217,884, or 15.6 cents per family. Recall that he could use a 10,000-line campaign in each of the 534 morning and evening papers in this territory for only $215,500 and that he was practically certain to reach every family in the region that read the English language. His cost for the newspaper campaign, using sixteen quarter-pages, which is about the usual weekly magazine full-page size, was one-quarter of a cent per message per family. For more money spent in the weekly magazines, he reaches only one-quarter of the field and his cost per message on a twelve-insertion basis is more than 60 times as great.

But maybe Mr. Flour Manufacturer thinks that the women's magazines—eleven of them—will furnish a more certain avenue to his market than any other medium. He's still trying to break down the Central States, and he finds that these magazines, all monthly with one exception, which issues twice a month, have 2,969,997 circulation in these states, or about one copy to every two families in the group. Then he looks to the bottom of the column and sees that a page in each of the eleven will cost $45,350. Six pages in each magazine will take $272,100 of his appropriation to buy the space. Art work, engraving, electrotyping, agency fees, etc., are extra.

To reach half of the families in the area once his cost would be 1.5 cents. To reach them six times it would be nine cents. Compare this with the four cents needed to reach every one of the families in the area through the newspapers, not once, or six times, but sixteen times.

Using all of these magazines (except the class group, which can be considered separately), the advertiser would reach 5,880,946 families—assuming that there is no duplication of circulation by these periodicals, which is a rash assumption. That would practically cover the region, though not so thickly as the newspapers cover it. The cost per page is $87,028.75. The cost per agate line is $168.15. As stated above a 10,000-line campaign in the newspapers would cost $215,500. An equal amount of space in the magazines—monthly, weekly and women's—would cost $1,681,500. To be sure, for the latter price, he would be covering not only the Central States, but every other part of the United States, regardless of whether he could or wanted to distribute his product outside of the Central States region. A 10,000-line campaign in newspapers where distribution is secured will move goods. Nobody knows whether a 10,000-line campaign in a composite and conglomerate list of magazines would even be read. And the newspaper campaign costs only 13 per cent of the magazine outlay.

It is a poor case that the magazines make when their circulations and rates are confronted with those of the daily newspapers for any given section or for the whole country. The class magazines, due to their limited fields of circulation, do not fare any better in financial comparisons. As a specific example, assume that the manufacturer of a new radio device wants to try out its selling possibilities in the Central States, where he is certain of a larger possible market than in any other of our groups. It is a low-priced proposition, demanding a large volume of sales and a low advertising cost.



He might use all of the daily newspapers of this group in a 5,000-line campaign, which would afford him fifty 100-line advertisements in each of these papers. The cost would be $10,750 for the campaign.

Or he might decide that the radio fans were closer readers of the Scientific American and Popular Science than they were of their daily newspapers. While the newspapers give him 6,113,314 circulation, or more than one copy to every family which now possesses a radio outfit and which may acquire one in the future, the scientific magazines give him a total of 66,969 circulation once a month, for a cost of $2.70 a line, or $13,500 for the 5,000-line campaign that the newspapers furnish for $10,750. In a word, the newspapers have almost 100 times the circulation for 80 per cent of the cost of the scientific periodicals. And the advertiser can assume that his radio fans all read newspapers. He can't make that assumption when dealing with magazines of very limited circulation.

Then the advertiser may be in doubt as to whether to use the 93 Sunday papers in the Central States, with their 4,106,128 circulation, or the eight weekly magazines, with their 1,406,869 circulation. If he placed his faith in the Sunday papers, his space would cost him $8.895 per line, and he would be certain of reaching more than two-thirds of the families in the area, probably more than 90 per cent of the English-reading public in these states. His 10,000-line campaign would permit him to use full-page space on four successive Sundays for a total expenditure of $88,950.

But, if he decided that the weekly magazines deserved the preference, his purchase would be one-third of the circulation that the Sunday papers afford for $34.00 per agate line, or about four times the newspaper rate. On a rate per line per million basis, the newspaper rate is about eight per cent of the magazine rate for the Central States group. It would seem that the magazines would have to claim all kinds of quality, class circulation, opportunity for display and color that the newspapers could not supply, if they were to succeed in offsetting a disadvantage of 1,100 per cent in cost.

For the manufacturer who wants to present his message once a week to consumers in the Central States only, in the localities where he has distribution and where he can make his profits, the weekly magazine is an expensive luxury, an ornament to his sales campaign, but the newspaper, be it morning, evening or Sunday, is a driving force that takes goods from his warehouse to the dealer's shelves and with dispatch to the consumer's closets. The Sunday papers will have accomplished their task for the advertiser and returned his investment in their space to him many fold while the weekly magazine is still trying to remind a third of the Sunday paper's family of readers that the product is coming on the market.

"Newspaper reading is a fixed daily habit in our lives and nothing is so close to the people of the land as the newspaper which each man and each woman swears by, or swears at, as the case may be," said William A. Thomson, director of the Bureau of Advertising of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association a few days ago.

"Manufacturers who use newspaper advertising find it a simple matter to interest retail dealers in selling their goods. The retail dealer believes in newspaper advertising because it is the kind which he himself uses when he advertises, or hopes to use when he can afford to advertise. When a manufacturer enters his city with a campaign of advertising in the newspapers which the dealer knows and reads, the dealer is invariably willing to stock up on the articles which the manufacturer wishes him to sell, simply because he understands these articles already have been half-sold to his own customers before he puts them on the shelves."

Leaving all consideration of cost aside, that last argument is sufficient to establish the newspaper's superiority as the medium for selling goods. Magazine advertising has its place in the scheme of merchandising, beyond a doubt, but in times when cost of manufacture are high and competition is keen—and when isn't it?—the newspaper's columns cannot be equalled for results, granted that the product is right and that the copy presents its merits. Newspaper advertising means low cost for space, low cost for copy, large results in sales, therefore, low advertising cost per sale. Magazine advertising at its best can do no more than make people remember a name, provided it is repeated often enough. It cannot bring people to the point of demanding a trade-marked brand from their dealers, to the degree that the dealer feels compelled to stock that brand. It sprays its message in a thin stream over the entire country, no matter whether the advertised goods can be sold universally or all the time. The newspaper puts the manufacturer's sales argument directly on the target, not six weeks or two months after the copy is written, but 24 hours, if that speed is needed.

Newspaper advertising permits advertisers to sell in markets where he can make a profit and to avoid those where the cost of selling is so high that profits are impossible. Magazine advertising makes him take the fat with the lean, with a potential large proportion of waste in any campaign.

It is now generally realized that the United States cannot be sold as a single market, but as a group of markets, which in turn include the usual geographical divisions of the country. These market groups differ widely in their tastes and requirements of food, wearing apparel, housing facilities, etc. Furnaces, oil heaters and fuels of various sorts may be in great demand in Vermont and Montana during the same days and weeks that Florida and California are calling for white trousers and iced soft drinks. But the same issue of the magazine that carries furnace advertisements into Montana and Vermont moves simultaneously into the sun-drenched regions of Palm Beach and Coronado. And the manufacturer of the furnace pays for a great deal of circulation that he cannot possibly use with the chance of getting his ideas accepted by the remaining readers. It is pure waste and it cannot be retained when margins of profit are as tenuous as they are likely to be for several years to come.

NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING MAKES LINE STRAIGHT

If an advertiser buys magazine space, he cannot avoid a certain percentage of waste. If he buys newspaper space, however, he cuts his proportion of waste to what minimum he chooses. He can select his newspapers, using one, or all, or a chosen few, in any locality. He can try them out in brief campaigns, dropping those which fail to produce the required volume of sales and holding his space and expenditure to the amounts that are necessary—and no more—to do the work he wants done. He will know how much it costs him—almost to the dollar—to get business through advertising, as many newspaper advertisers already have learned, and he can base his manufacture and sales plans for the future on that knowledge.

The man who buys newspaper advertising to sell his goods can buy it just as he buys the iron or the wood as the raw materials from which he makes them. When he buys newspaper space in market groups selected after close examination, he is raking the unknown quantity out of the equation. He is engaged in a regular commercial transaction, with no hidden factors, with risk and speculation cut to the minimum. And finally, he is taking the high road to solution of the day's most pressing social problem—reduction in the cost of getting goods from the manufacturer's plant to the consumer's doorstep. On that there can be no argument.

BECKWITH COVERS UNITED STATES

The above map emphasizes the wide-spread influence of The S. C. Beckwith Special Agency and the strategic positions of its 8 offices. Each office commands a well defined field of national advertising.

No important advertising point is more than a night's ride from a Beckwith Office.

The Beckwith organization totals 74 people, of which 24 are trained advertising salesmen. It is the oldest, largest, most powerful and best known special agency in America.

The character and leadership of the newspapers together with the years of satisfactory service, are a most substantial endorsement of the high standard of representation rendered by this agency.

The Post	4,446,923
The Journal	4,270,771
The Daily Herald-Examiner	4,232,869

THE DAILY NEWS' excess over the next highest score, that of the Daily Tribune, is 3,254,310 lines

To the experienced advertiser there is added interest and encouragement in the fact that during the last six months of the year THE DAILY NEWS turned an earlier loss in lineage to gains, month by month, which by the end of the year placed the lineage of the whole year, 470,414 lines in excess of the year 1921, thereby reflecting a corresponding improvement in business conditions generally up to the very end of the year. Here is a comparison of the display lineage of the daily newspapers of Chicago for the last six months of 1922 and 1921:

	1922	1921	Gain	Comparison
THE DAILY NEWS	6,839,894	6,258,118	581,776	581,776
The Daily Tribune	5,275,972	4,762,718	513,254	513,254

leadership among the daily newspapers of dvertising. Here are the figures:—

Classified Advertising

More people placed their "want-ads" in THE DAILY NEWS in 1922 than in any other daily newspaper in Chicago, as is evidenced by the total number of individual advertisements printed by each of the recognized daily want-ad mediums. Here are the figures:

	Number of Ads	Comparison
THE DAILY NEWS	909,920	909,920
The Daily Tribune	871,061	871,061
The Daily Herald-Examiner	149,179

From which it appears that in 1922 THE DAILY NEWS led its nearest competitor, The Daily Tribune, by 38,859 ads

THE DAILY NEWS is Chicago's "Want-Ad" Directory.

The figures quoted are compiled by The Advertising Record Co. an independent audit service maintained by all the Chicago newspapers.

THE DAILY NEWS' year-in and year-out advertising leadership among the daily newspapers of Chicago bears convincing testimony to its pre-eminent power of service in every line of business in which general publicity is essential to success, whether it be a matter of personal service, general merchandising or investment.

of paid advertising

This is a gain of 1,587,815 lines over 1921 and a gain of 1,434,693 lines over the best previous record. It is also the largest volume of paid advertising ever carried by any morning, evening and Sunday combination in New England in any one calendar year. The reason for this splendid showing is to be found in the one word—

RESULTS

The sworn average net paid circulation figures for the 12 months ending December 31, 1922, were as follows:

The Providence Journal.....32,240
The Providence Sunday Journal.....55,318
The Evening Bulletin.....59,715

This makes a new high record for all three newspapers, which is a tribute to the confidence in which they are held by the people of Rhode Island.

America's Most Prosperous Market Covered Thoroughly by Detroit News

Facts and Figures for Space Buyers Who Wish to Enter the Detroit Market

DETROIT completed a banner year with the approach of 1923, for 1922 proved to be one of the greatest eras of its history.

Employment records soared, employment reaching almost as high a peak as during the spring of 1920 When Detroit experienced its greatest prosperity. At present there exists an actual scarcity of skilled labor, indicating how manufactures in Detroit are occupied.

More motor cars were manufactured in Detroit in 1922 than in any year in the history of the industry. Ford price cuts have brought the motor vehicle more and more within the reach of the mass of the populace and even though motor car production was phenomenal in 1922 this record is bound to be beaten subsequently.

All this means, of course, a still greater and more prosperous Detroit. With 75% of all American made automobiles being manufactured in Detroit and vicinity, this city holds for advertisers a remarkable field for exploitation.

Indicative of the general trend of conditions in Detroit is the building program. Some 19 structures are under way in downtown Detroit, alone, ranging from $100,000 to $12,000,000 in cost. Few of these buildings are less than eight stories high; one is to be 21 stories. While most of these structures are to be used for offices and stores, two are being expressly constructed for hotel purposes, showing how the hotel interests view Detroit's future. In total building Detroit is unsurpassed by any city even remotely approximating its population.

Leads In Advertising

FOLLOWING Detroit's unusual prosperity, advertisers have naturally sought this field out with the result that The Detroit News was third in 1922 among the newspapers of the country in total advertising. It was kept from being first only because of the increase of editorial and news matter in its columns which compelled The News to omit many columns of advertising during the heavy advertising periods of the year.

The News has been first, second or third in total advertising in America for the last eight years.

In practically every important selling classification of advertising The News was first in Detroit.

It published more than a million Want Ads in 1922—650,000 more than its nearest competitor. This is an indication of how the Detroit public regard The News as an advertising medium.

The News also led in automotive advertising, carrying 60,000 more agate lines than its nearest competitor; automotive advertisers realizing that the thorough coverage of The News is an invaluable aid to sales.

Leads In Circulation

In Rotogravure advertising, The News has always led the field. In 1922 it carried 122% more or over twice as much Rotogravure advertising as its nearest competitor.

The Detroit News having purchased the Detroit Journal and consolidated its circulation, July 19th, 1922, is now the only evening paper in Detroit having the Associated Press franchise. Before this consolidation The News had a thorough coverage of the field. Now it reaches practically every English speaking home in Detroit and vicinity, having more than 280,000 circulation on week days. With 240,000 Sunday circulation The News has over 65,000 more circulation than its nearest Sunday competitor.

The Detroit News weekday and Sunday offers advertisers an opportunity to reach the whole field at one rate, an opportunity unequaled by any other metropolitan city in the United States.

Advertisers should take advantage of Detroit's unusual prosperity and The News ability to cover this field.

Only Two Newspapers Showed a Gain in Paterson in 1922

They were The Press-Guardian and The Sunday Chronicle [Sunday Edition of The Press Guardian]

This chart shows the average net paid gain per day based on statements rendered the Government on October 1, 1921 and October 1, 1922.

Since its last report was made The Press Guardian has been steadily climbing and the advent of another morning paper has again altered the situation.

THE IMPORTANCE OF WASHINGTON

To-day it is not only the Capital City of the United States, but it rises to the dignity of the foremost city of the world—in political and economic leadership.

For your product not to be properly represented in Washington is to lose not only the large local patronage, but to miss the prestige of its far-reaching influence.

In Washington The Star is the leading newspaper of this leading city. A real necessity to cover Washington as it should be covered.

It's a convincing fact that the local merchants use The Star to carry their unabridged messages to the public—in fact it frequently is true that the number of lines of advertising appearing in The Star exceeds considerably that carried by all the other papers combined.

Of course, Washington merchants are in a position to know the value of The Star as an advertising medium.

Please Read All This Story!

A little more than a year ago, The Detroit Times came under its present ownership.

It had, then, a circulation of 26,000.

There were at that time three evening newspapers.

Today, The Detroit Times has a circulation in excess of 170,000 and there are now only two papers left in the evening field.

But that is not all—

There is a SUNDAY Detroit Times, also.

The Sunday Detroit Times is only five months old.

Its circulation is more than 175,000.

Some people say that this breaks all national records for circulation growth.

That's interesting! So is the fact that in the last nine months the advertising volume of The Evening Times has increased more than 260%—while The Sunday Times carries already more than 250 columns of advertising in each issue—exclusive of the wonderful American Weekly.

In addition to carrying the large copy of every leading Detroit merchant, The Times has flattering representation from the principal national advertisers.

The Automobile Section of The Detroit Times on Sunday carries a most interesting array of the copy of all good cars, accessories, and tires.

The Detroit Times, in its evening edition has heavy automobile representation week after week.

Circulation and advertising are growing steadily—in fact, we've twice outgrown our plant facilities—and another expansion is in process.

All of this is by way of saying that The Times in Detroit is creating national records for solid, substantial, circulation and advertising growth.

It is a medium respected by the local advertiser, because it is respected by the local reader—and the business acumen of the national advertiser has, as usual, not failed to sense this condition.

The rate for national advertising contracts signed before February 1, will be 29 cents a line, too low, by far. Rate after February 1, 1923, will be 33 cents—and too cheap then. The Detroit Times is worth the careful consideration of every space buyer who respects the purchasing power of the advertising dollar.

We have a merchandising department trained to do things a little better than you might expect—nothing freakish—just sensible merchandising aid. Our monthly Retail Times is said to be one of the best trade-aids in the country. Our national representation is in the hands of the G. Logan Payne Company, and Payne, Burns & Smith—folks who know what it's all about from your end.

Thanks for wading through this long tale—but you must admit that we have a "story."

FIFTEEN YEARS OF DOMINANT SUPREMACY

The uninterrupted proven preference of advertisers, both local and national, for the CINCINNATI TIMES-STAR was evidenced again in the year 1922 by

10,459,407 Lines of Display Advertising

This is 1,921,031 lines more than the lineage published by the second paper, including both daily and Sunday editions—or six days against seven.

1921 was the banner year in the history of the TIMES-STAR, with 182,497 lines more than 1922. Yet this amount, by which the year just closed falls short of its 1921 record, is less than one-tenth of the amount by which it still leads its nearest competitor.

The display advertising published by the TIMES-STAR in 1922 is

1,880,823 lines more than the largest amount ever published by any other paper in the city

8,578,584 lines having been published by the second paper in 1920.

That the dominant leadership of the TIMES-STAR is not temporary, accidental or fluctuating, but that it is continuous, progressive and permanent is proved by the display advertising space records for the past 15 years:

	TIMES-STAR Total Display	EXCESS OVER Second Paper	EXCESS OVER Third Paper
Year 1922	10,459,407 lines	1,921,031 lines	3,949,463 lines
Average 10 years	7,439,714 lines	1,734,459 lines	2,425,881 lines
Average 15 years	6,273,153 lines	1,362,626 lines	1,941,186 lines

THE HOCHI SHIMBUN

Japan's Oldest Evening Newspaper
With Large Morning Edition

TOTAL PAID CIRCULATION LARGEST IN TOKYO

The Hochi Shimbun was established in 1872 by the late Marquis Okuma, and continuously since that early date has lent all its influence to the support of its great founder's lofty ideals.

In the foreign news field the Hochi has built up a service which is unexcelled, and which has earned for it many readers who are intensely interested in persons and events abroad. This interest has been found to exert considerable influence on their taste in the purchase of imported commodities and undoubtedly has increased their consumption of products from abroad.

"As Milwaukee Buys—The Nation Buys!—
—Try It Out In Representative Milwaukee"

Sell Milwaukee First

THERE are half a million buyers in the first city of diversified industry in the United States. Purchases run high in Milwaukee, averaging more than $9,000,000 every business day—more than one million dollars every hour. Wisconsin purchases average $33,000,000 every business day.

Business has been consistently good here during the last year, and, based on present activity, 1923 should develop even bigger buying.

A receptive audience in a receptive market invites additional advertising and sales effort. The response of this market is assured. Have you as a manufacturer or advertiser something to contribute to the comfort and daily life of Milwaukee and Wisconsin people? Remember there are approximately three million people in this market, and 54% of this population is concentrated in the 150 mile zone of which Milwaukee is the metropolis.

Here The Milwaukee Journal offers most as your sales medium. The Journal delivers 80% direct coverage of Milwaukee at one low cost, being read by four out of every five English-reading Milwaukee families.

Furthermore, The Journal penetrates to every corner of Wisconsin and Upper Michigan. Constant repetition will brand your name, your product, your trade mark in the buying consciousness of the people of this territory which is served by Milwaukee jobbers.

The Milwaukee JOURNAL
FIRST - by Merit

Sales and advertising managers are requested to send for The Journal's analyses of the Milwaukee Market in relation to various products.

Gentlemen:

It is a pleasure to advise that we are going to press Saturday, December 31st, with our second Business Review page containing 128 1/2 inches of advertising.

We desire to express our appreciation of the splendid corps of salesmen who have secured this business. We are very much pleased with the manner in which they have co-operated with us in placing only the best class of business on this page. The entire crew is to be commended for their efficient methods and dignified solicitation.

Wishing you every success, we are

Yours very truly,

Thos. W. Briggs Co.,
Memphis, Tenn.

Dear Sirs:

We were able to go to press Saturday December 3rd., with our first INDUSTRIAL PAGE, carrying one hundred thirty-two inches of advertising.

We wish to say a word of comendation for the excellent force of workers who carried the work forward to a successful finish, despite the depression which has been felt in Akron for several months. It has never before been our pleasure to work in such perfect accord with men as we have been privileged during the progress of this work.

They did their work efficiently and quietly, without any undue collaboration with The Beacon Journal, and if we at any time can say a good word to further your interest we will be glad to do so.

We have no doubt but that the good impression made will continue to exist, and trust we may again look forward to its continuance after the expiration of the present contract.

Yours very truly,

THE BEACON JOURNAL CO.,
J. H. Barry
Business Manager

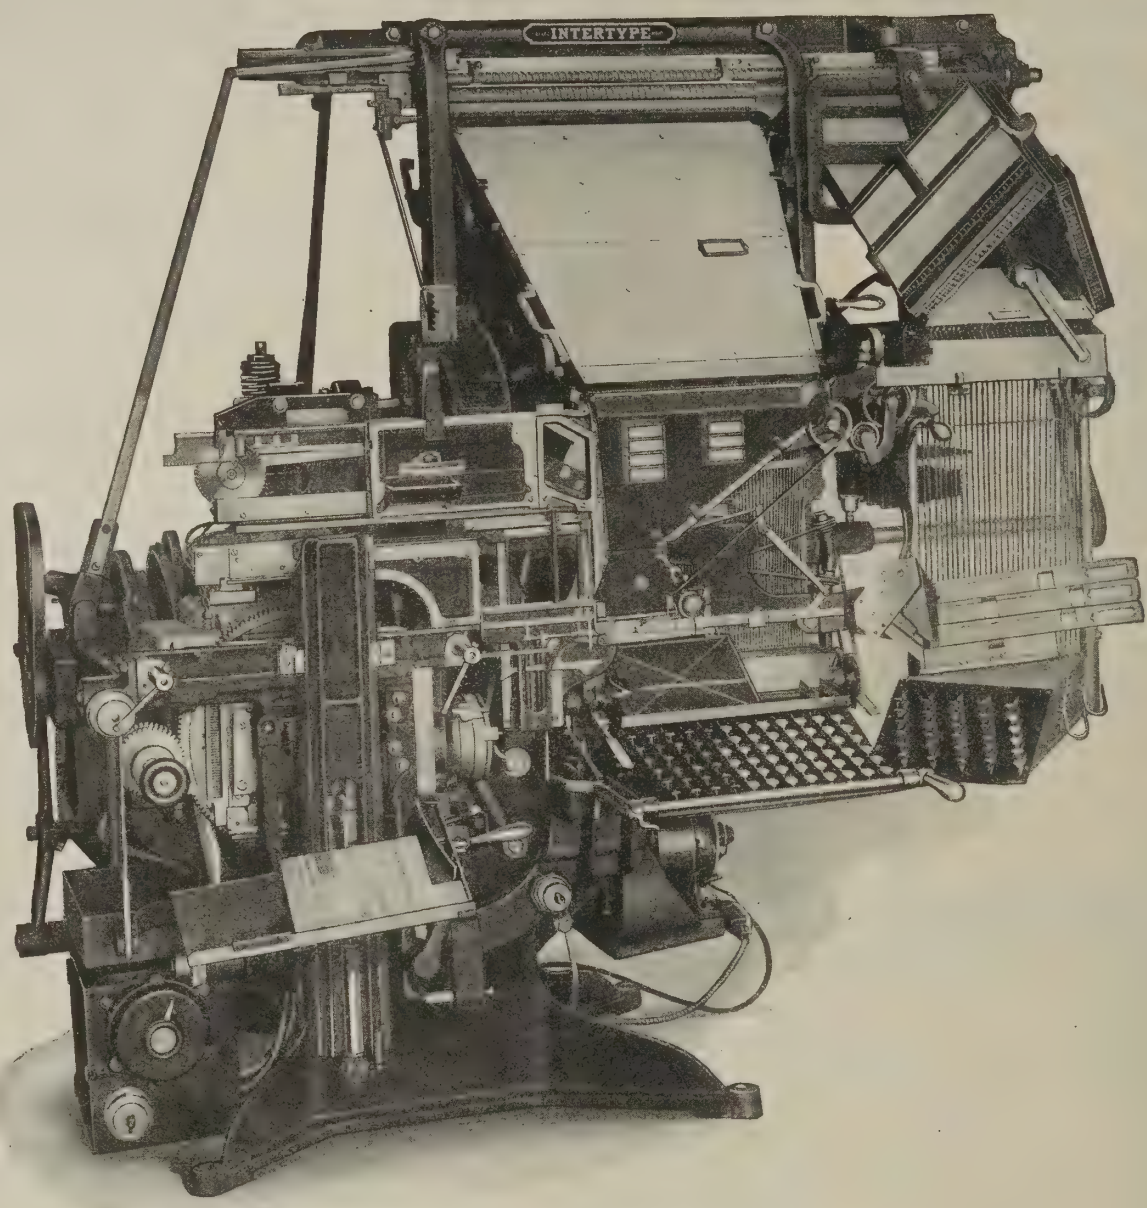
Speak for Themselves

Our "Weekly Business Review Page" is a permanent feature that adds 10,000 lines of local display to your monthly count. And it is business which you would not get otherwise.

The fact that we can send you dozens of fac-simile letters like the above, from publishers all over the country, proves our claim of service of the highest type. We make the contracts and renew them before expiration.

We make advertisers of non-advertisers. We prove the value of local advertising to your manufacturers and wholesale jobbers.

If your city is larger than 40,000, we can offer you a very interesting proposition for our weekly business review page. And should there be a legitimate reason for one, we can sell a special edition for you.



To get samples of our work, to get details of our plan, to get list of references, places you under no obligations, simply write or wire—

Thomas W. Briggs Co.

The Only 42-em Line Composing Machine

Large type is usually set in wide lines. The common limit of width for slug-casting machines is 30 ems (5 inches)—less than three newspaper columns. Wide Measure Intertypes, one of which, Model D-s.m., is illustrated above, can set a line up to 42 ems wide (7 inches) on a single slug. This exclusive Intertype feature, which is applicable to all models, is useful for ordinary text composition in extra wide measures, as well as for display work.

INTERTYPE

Save Money with Display Intertypes

Display lines up to full width 36-point bold can be set on economical Intertype slugs

MOST display composition is in sizes not larger than 36-point. Display Intertypes, which set all sizes up to full width 36-point bold, offer a wonderful opportunity for substantially larger profits on this class of work.

It is the old story of hand work versus machine work—and the machines always win.

The time-savings start with the actual setting of the line—keyboard operation and automatic justification in place of picking up and justifying separate pieces of type. Then come the advantages of Intertype slugs in handling, make-up, and lock-up. Finally, the Intertype way simplifies breaking up the form and eliminates distribution.

Display Intertypes are very flexible—easy to change from one size or face to another. Small fonts of matrix faces, especially the larger Intertype sizes up to full width 36-point bold, can be stored in Intertype Split Magazines and used very profitably for job and display ad composition. The Split Magazines are provided with convenient handles, as shown in the illustration, and can be changed in a few seconds.

NEW HAVEN

Connecticut's Largest City

NEW HAVEN is the Largest city in the state of Connecticut in the midst of the most active Manufacturing districts of the United States.

NEW HAVEN is a world's center for the manufacture of household hardware, clocks, steel wire, copper wire, rifles, ammunition, sporting goods, paper boxes, corsets, hosiery and rubber goods, a great diversity of manufactures.

NEW HAVEN is a prosperous community with a population of over 186,000 and a large percentage of wage earners owning their own homes.

NEW HAVEN has banking resources of over 125 Million Dollars.

NEW HAVEN is the opening wedge to the fertile Connecticut field.

THE NEW HAVEN REGISTER Covers The Field

THE REGISTER is overwhelmingly first in New Haven and is everywhere recognized as the leading and influential medium of the community.

THE REGISTER carried several million lines of advertising each year, more than its nearest competitor.

THE REGISTER with over 35,000 net paid circulation daily, 91% of which is delivered within 10 miles of the New Haven City Hall, has a larger circulation than the combined totals of its two nearest competitors.

THE REGISTER brings results to its advertisers. Its concentrated circulation brings from five to ten times the results of any competitor.

THE REGISTER completely covers the field at minimum cost. It is not necessary to use any other paper in New Haven to secure maximum results.

THE REGISTER has more exclusive accounts than any other paper in the state. It covers the field.

No Connecticut Campaign is Complete without

The New Haven Register

FLORIDA TIMES-UNION

JACKSONVILLE, FLA.

THE FLORIDA TIMES-UNION leads all other newspapers in its territory in daily and Sunday circulation.

The Home delivered circulation of the Florida Times-Union in the City of Jacksonville is 7,000 greater than that of the afternoon paper. The circulation of the Sunday Times-Union in the City of Jacksonville is greater than the total paid circulation of the afternoon paper.

Practically every national account in this territory uses the Times-Union; very many of them use the Times-Union exclusively.

The Times-Union's merchandising department is alert and promptly renders efficient service.

Representatives in the national field: Benjamin & Kentnor Company, New York and Chicago.

Leadership of

The New York Times

From "A Study of The New York Times" by John F. Sweeney, of the Sweeney & James Co., advertising agents, Cleveland, Ohio

In 1922 The New York Times published 24,142,222 agate lines of advertising, 2,489,609 lines more than in 1921 and an excess of 6,898,132 lines over the volume printed by the second New York newspaper.

The New York Times has for years led all other New York newspapers in volume of advertising. The Times believes that the function of a newspaper advertising department is to sell advertising space. What it offers to advertisers in quality and volume of circulation, buying power, confidence and responsiveness of readers and established results is of great value to an advertiser.

FIRST ON THE LIST

Rarely does a newspaper advertising campaign covering the New York metropolitan district fail to include The New York Times as the first newspaper on the list. In national campaigns, where only one New York newspaper is used, The Times, with few exceptions, is chosen.

Announcements of merchandise frequently appear only in The Times, at least in the eastern United States. Advertisements of companies specializing in the construction of large buildings, announcements of gas engines, machinery, hardware and other lines, heretofore advertised almost exclusively in trade periodicals, now appear with increasing frequency in The New York Times.

The development of new lines of business and the encouragement of heretofore undeveloped sources of advertising is considered well worth while by The Times. In this, as in many other enterprises on which The Times expends time and money, it is rendering a service to other newspapers.

PRODUCES UNUSUAL RESULTS

The confidence which readers feel in the dependability of the news columns of The New York Times is reflected in the advertising columns and in the great purchasing power of its readers, producing results to advertisers which frequently are remarkable. Many profitable businesses have been built up, efficient selling organizations formed and merchandise of every description sold in large volume through the Times.

The New York Times is distributed in 8,000 cities, towns and villages throughout the United States. On week days the sale of The Times is 350,000 and on Sundays it is purchased by 550,000 persons.

LEADING THE LIST

In a city and nation where class circulation means everything, where American advertisers in the ordinary newspaper buy waste circulation among Japanese whose purchasing power is low, The Jiji Shimpo leads all. With a monthly subscription rate of Y1.10, The Jiji is the highest-priced newspaper in Japan.

THE JIJI SHIMPO

時事新報

Is the newspaper of prosperous, ambitious Japan—a young nation, newly-endowed with means for enjoying the goods of the West. Her most progressive sons and daughters, eager to learn more of America and all America has to give Japan, read The Jiji Shimpo. Not only on account of its superior presentation of domestic and foreign news, but because it carries the bulk of foreign advertising appearing in Japan, The Jiji is the favorite of the class the American advertiser must reach.

The Jiji's New York representative, Mr. J. P. Barry, will gladly discuss the opportunities of the Japanese market, which he has studied at close range.

A News Dragnet Covering Europe

Every Important Point Reached by The New York Herald Daily and Sunday Wire Service

Principal Bureaus and Chief Correspondents

PARIS ..... Laurence Hills, Roger Morrison
LONDON ..... John McHugh Stuart, Marshall Saunders
ROME ..... Sanford Griffith
BERLIN ..... Lincoln Eyre
MOSCOW ..... Francis McCullagh
DUBLIN ..... C. A. Beals
VIENNA ..... Henry Diez
CONSTANTINOPLE ..... B. F. Kospoth

With all Europe in a state of evolution, The New York Herald news gathering staff overseas is the strongest in the entire eighty-five years of its history.

Its organization includes correspondents of world-wide reputation—such as Laurence Hills, Lincoln Eyre and Francis McCullagh. No correspondent knows Germany better than does Lincoln Eyre, and Francis McCullagh is the ablest correspondent in Russia. He has traversed Siberia from west to east, from north to south, and back again. He speaks Russian and knows the Russians. What he writes will stand the severest test.

In Paris in addition to a large and effective staff The New York Herald publishes a daily newspaper which passes on to The Herald in American news of its own gathering.

By this combination of a newspaper on the continent and first-class men in all the important capitals, The New York Herald maintains a live, comprehensive daily and Sunday wire service that is unsurpassed.

NOW the Northwest's Largest Afternoon Paper

FROM a standing start twenty years ago, the Oregon Journal has grown to be the largest afternoon newspaper on the Pacific Coast north of San Francisco Bay. It now has a Sunday circulation of MORE THAN 100,000 and it is STILL GROWING.

RICH TERRITORY

THE territory which the Journal serves is one of the richest, per capita, in the United States. In Portland alone, with its 300,000 population, more than 44% of the people own their own homes. Tenement houses are unknown. And this goes for ALL THE OREGON COUNTRY with its 1,000,000 of people.

Portland itself has come to be:

The WORLD'S LARGEST LUMBER MANUFACTURING CENTER,

AMERICA'S SECOND LARGEST WOOL CENTER,

AMERICA'S SECOND WHEAT EXPORTING SEAPORT,

WEST COAST'S LARGEST MEAT PACKING AND LIVESTOCK CENTER.

Such a country as this has a tremendous purchasing power. Are you getting YOUR share of the business?

The Oregon Journal Will Help You!

Avail yourself of The Journal's Merchandising Bureau. It is at your service to investigate and analyze YOUR particular market FIRST HAND. It will report directly to you.

——this, then, is my personal invitation to you to be my guest whenever you are in New York City.

——let me know, beforehand, just what you want in the way of a room, and it will be ready for you———or drop in unexpectedly and take "pot luck" with me at any time.

——you are welcome, either way.

——these prices are "fixed" and you may depend on them, just as you may depend on the class of service and the class of people you will find here.

——please, while here, regard yourself as my guest—my very welcome guest—and I hope that you will consider me as your host, rather than merely a hotelkeeper.

——the men and women associated with me in running these establishments have been carefully chosen, not alone for their ability, but because they have the cheerful disposition and honest desire to please that go so far in making your stay pleasant.

——we are high class, but not high brow; sincere, but not subservient; cordial, but not cringing; efficient, but not officious.

——the "glad to see you", the "au revoir" and the "come again, soon", are all of them equally sincere.

——come often, make yourself at home, ask for what you want, and expect the human element, the helpful, friendly element everywhere.

The First Three Weeks of 1923 witnessed the keen attention of the entire newspaper world focused on INTERNATIONAL NEWS SERVICE because of its remarkable succession of vital news beats.

A RECORD NEVER EQUALED

In the history of news gathering institutions, there never was such a conspicuous achievement in any similar period of time. The excellence of a news report is judged not by its sporadic scoops, but by its consistent, day in and day out performance. ANY news agency can score a scoop some time. What amazes newspaper publishers everywhere is that EVERY DAY for the last three weeks I. N. S. has scored heavily on all the important news. It is by this consistent performance that I. N. S. today leads the field.

From the Ruhr to Mer Rouge

International News Service scooped all opposition services on ALL the important developments in the two stories that command first pages everywhere—the French invasion of the Ruhr and the investigation of Ku Klux in Louisiana.

From the moment France declared Germany in default until her occupation of the Ruhr was complete, Weyer in Essen and Mason in Paris beat all other correspondents with the first true news of the invasion.

Hutchinson, covering the Ku Klux trial at Bastrop received the congratulations of scores of I. N. S. clients for his astonishing exclusive stories. I. N. S. conspicuous news beats included these important stories:

FIRST with announcement of French Invasion of the Ruhr.

AHEAD with flash from Paris that Reparations Commission voted Germany in default.

SCOOPED all opposition on text of Roland Boyden's statement before Reparations Commission.

EXCLUSIVE story that Bernhardt is bankrupt despite all the money she earned in her career.

TEN minutes ahead with announcement President Harding recalled troops from the Rhine.

ONLY news service to give General Allen, commander of American forces in Germany, news of recall.

AHEAD with discovery of Communist plot in Paris, and arrest of several ring leaders.

COMPLETE beat on death of former King Constantine of Greece.

FIRST with Premier Poincairé's speech before Chamber defending French invasion of Ruhr.

BEAT opposition services with British Cabinet's announcement to keep British troops on the Rhine.

COPYRIGHTED exclusive interview with Thyssen, German magnate, who declared French invasion meant ruin of both France and Germany.

SCOOPED other news agencies on appointment of Crissinger to head of Federal Reserve Board.

EXCLUSIVE interview with Evans, Imperial Wizard of Ku Klux Klan, on Mer Rouge expose.

AHEAD with news of execution of Irish Irregulars.

EXCLUSIVE story of sensational attempt to rob the Honolulu treasury of seven millions.

AN HOUR ahead with flash that insurgent forces had driven allied forces out of Memel.

FIRST with refusal of German industrial magnates to obey French.

FIRST with news of their arrest, and general strike that followed.

EXCLUSIVE interview with William Jennings Bryan on "three years of prohibition."

FIRST with news of death of Wally Reid.

SCOOP on identification of "hooded band" at Mer Rouge.

AHEAD with story of strike riot at Harrison, Ark.

AHEAD with acquittal of five miners for "Herrin massacre."

BEAT by forty-five minutes on story of murder of girl dancer at San Diego.

IMPORTANT exclusive story from White House that "not a dollar owing to the United States by foreign nations would be cancelled."

FIRST with announcement that Italy and Belgium had asked Great Britain to intervene in Ruhr situation.

TWO HOURS ahead with startling story that refugees from Asia Minor were dying at rate of thousand a day in Athens.

"Get it First—but FIRST get it RIGHT!"

This slogan, ringing incessantly in the ears of every I. N. S. reporter, expresses the spirit that brought the news first and right to American newspapers from every corner of the world. It is responsible for all the gigantic news beats and thrilling exclusive stories which within the last three weeks have established a record never equalled by a news gathering institution.

GET OFF THAT POWDER KEG!

YOU are sitting on a keg of powder if your newspaper is merely an assembling plant, its editorial content consisting of ready-made parts standardized and supplied by wholesalers outside your control. The wholesaler may decide to start a paper in your town himself. Or he may take that page of comics, that column of comment, that page of pictures, that woman's service, that sports service, any feature for which you have through the years been building up a following and sell it to a competitor. He can, if he wants to.

Even the local news is standardized. News can happen anywhere, but the papers, from long habit, all go to the same places to look for it—Police Station, City Hall, Court House, Federal Building, etc.

We can install a system whereby your paper will be your own product, something no one can take away from you, a real newspaper, something other than an elaboration of the vice, crime and municipal administrative statistics of the day.

REMEMBER THIS!

IF fifteen cents of every dollar of receipts does not remain in the till as profit—there is something wrong with your newspaper. Whatever the problem, the reasonable certainty is that we have the solution. We know the practices and the results of the practices of many newspapers, under many conditions and in many different environments. This experience, the knowledge thus gained, is our equipment for any job you may give us to tackle.

AND REMEMBER THIS

All departments, business, editorial as well as mechanical, have expensive bad habits, some of such long standing that only an outsider can see them. We take efficiency jobs on this basis: Our pay to come out of what we save you. No saving for you, no pay for us.

SURVEYORS OF NEWSPAPERS

We are equipped to make a survey of your entire plant and business, everything that bears upon cost, content, receipts or circulation. Or we will survey any department of your business, take it apart from top to toe, analyze it, tell you what's good and what's bad, how to make the good better and how to eliminate the bad.

WE INSTALL NEW PLANTS

For a new paper we will make a survey of the entire circulatory territory, reduce to figures the possibilities and by analyzing the character of the field, indicate what must be the character of the proposed paper to be successful. We will advise you as to the type of equipment best adapted to your needs and how much and where to buy and what to pay.

Drop us a line about the problem that bothers you most. If we can help you we will tell you. If we can't we will tell you that. In either case you obligate yourself for not one cent.

VICTOR H. MORGAN, Publishers' Counsellor

He takes his pay out of what he saves you 900,000!

ON SUNDAY, January 7, 1923, the net paid circulation of the Chicago Sunday Tribune reached a new high mark of 900,000. This represents an increase over June, 1920, of more than 100,000 Daily and more than 150,000 Sunday. The same features that helped to swell Chicago Tribune circulation to such a point are available to other newspapers.

Location of Chicago Tribune correspondents

DURING 1922, The Foreign News Service of the Chicago Tribune scored so many scoops in Europe, Asia and South America that many European Newspapers, as well as 28 in the United States, are now buying its news reports. Some of the outstanding scoops of the year include: Williams on Battle of Four Courts; Clayton on Mudania Conference; Seldes on Secret Jewish Army in Russia; Dailey on The Battle for Peking; Matheson on Emancipation of Geisha Girls; Wills on Dethroning of Sultan of Turkey by Nationalists. The Chicago Tribune maintains offices in Paris, London, Dublin, Berlin, Moscow, Rome, Madrid, Rio de Janeiro, Buenos Aires, Tokio, Peking, Shanghai, Manila

Interest in foreign affairs will continue to be high. The Chicago Tribune Foreign News Staff face privation, hardship and occasionally persecution to get the FACTS.

Newspapers subscribing to Chicago Tribune leased wire service include:

P. & A. PHOTOS in its first year in business has charged and received higher prices for its services than any other picture service or syndicate in the business.

ALTHOUGH the organization was started just a year ago, Pacific & Atlantic Photos scored more beats and more exclusive picture scoops than all its competitors. It is our belief and policy of action that live news pictures quickly transmitted are as important to the newspaper of today as live news.

A PAGE of interesting live news and feature pictures daily, is as valuable a feature, in our opinion, as the best comic strip. Pictures interest all classes of readers. Pictures build and hold circulation.

P. & A. had a stiff battle selling its services in the past year; but today, despite its higher prices, publishers are now fighting for exclusive P. & A. service in their territory and gladly pay the increased cost.

PACIFIC & ATLANTIC PHOTOS, INC.

Organized by:
Chicago Tribune, World's Greatest Newspaper and
Daily News, New York's Picture Newspaper

BOSTON Charles L. Mathieu, General Manager, 25 Park Place, New York CHICAGO

PHILADELPHIA, WASHINGTON, LOS ANGELES, SAN FRANCISCO, LONDON, PARIS, BERLIN

Services still available in some territories.

PRINT SERVICE—News photographs, daily, from all offices.

ROTOGRAVURE SERVICE—Select news and feature prints with advance release dates, for gravure publication only.

MATRIX SERVICES—INDIVIDUAL MATS of from twelve to fifteen live news and feature pictures, adaptable to any makeup. DAILY from New York and Chicago offices.

SOLID PAGE matrix of news and feature pictures. Made up individually for each subscriber, complete with text, heads, etc., ready for press cast. DAILY.

SPORT SERVICE, consisting of mats of two live sport pictures for daily use and two layouts, three or four columns, for Saturday or Sunday use. Complete with articles by experts.

Busy-Prosperous BINGHAMTON

New Jersey, forty-fifth state in the Union in area, ranks tenth in population. It stands seventh in the amount of Personal Income Tax Paid and third in total resources of Building and Loan Associations.

NEW JERSEY

is the logical test market of the Nation.

3 155,900 inhabitants — 721,841 progressive families whose buying is unhampered by traditions, racial customs or climatic conditions. Cosmopolitan people who want the most modern up-to-date things—whether food or clothing or automobiles—and who have the money to pay for them.

Test campaigns in New Jersey definitely indicate what sales acceptance products will receive upon entering metropolitan cities.

You can reach 40% of the people of New Jersey in the principal cities—the buying centers of the state—through the home-town newspapers of the New Jersey Daily League. Complete merchandising assistance at the service of national advertisers.

"New Jersey and its Twelve Major Markets" contains 56 pages of valuable information. It is published for the benefit of manufacturers interested in intensive selling. It is free upon request. Write for it.

WORLD BUILDING
NEW YORK CITY

His articles are printed simultaneously in fifteen languages, and on every continent.

The United Feature Syndicate owns exclusive world rights outside of the British Isles to this—the most important news feature of 1923!

Big Features That Will Build Newspapers

A Brief Outline of the 1923 Program Offered to Editors

THIS advertisement is not meant to be a complete catalog of our 1923 activities. The United Feature ndicate, always on the alert, is con-ntly offering new releases.

Form the habit of writing us fully. ll us your problems. Remember that lping editors improve their papers is r specialized business, and that our perience is world-wide.

Here are a few suggestions, taken from r long list of features designed espe-lly to add reader-interest and person-ty to American newspapers:

Comics

"THEM DAYS IS GONE FOR-VER," by Al Posen. Done in yme and set to music. Different, stinctive, and original. Six column ip in mat form. Now in The Bos-n Globe, New York Telegram, St. uis Times, Kansas City Star, and ny others. Not much territory en, but if we can let you have this mic you will do well to close for immediately.

"CASEY THE COP," by H. . Talburt. Good-humored pokes ilt around policemen. You'll find sey clippings pasted in station uses everywhere. Used by such pers as The Chicago Daily News, ooklyn Eagle, and San Francisco lletin. Six column strip in mat form.

"TUBBY," by Winner. A brand w small boy six column strip in mat rm. Announced here for the first ne. Ask for samples.

Special Features

JOHNNY GRUELLE, artist and thor of the most popular children's oks in America, illustrates and writes short daily story for children called Raggedy Ann and Raggedy Andy." ll first-run material. Ideal for omen's or children's pages. New ork Sun, Cleveland Press, and De-oit News are among the numerous ilies using it. A few territories are ill open.

"GRIPPING MOMENTS IN RAND OPERA," a series of 12 signed articles by opera stars with half-tone mats. Gives the personal and human interest element in amusing situations which have arisen in the careers of such celebrities as Galli-Curci, Lazzari, Schipo, Amato, and others, as told by themselves.

"SECRETS OF SONG," by Madame Melba. Series of six articles giving her own simple rules and exercises for voice improvement. Not only for singers, but for every one who wants a better voice.

PERSONALITY STORIES, written by David L. Blumenfeld and illustrated with photographs. Intimate two column stories about the daily lives of famous persons, including Pope Pius XI, Bonar Law, D'Annunzio, Queen Mary, H. G. Wells, etc. New! Timely! Lively! Ask for exclusive rights in your territory.

HOW AND WHAT TO EAT, by Eugene Christian, famous food specialist. Sound advice written in a chatty, readable style, on the one subject which is of universal appeal. Just what you've been looking for as a woman's or editorial page feature. Announced here for first time. All territory open. Send for samples.

MYSTERY CONTEST, by James W. Young. Tremendous possibilities for circulation building. Stories proceed with swift action to last chapter. Then readers try for prizes for best solutions. Young's solution is printed with prize announcements. New. All territories open.

JANE BURR, author of best sellers, is on her way around the world in knickers. She is sending back exclusive stories, with photographs suitable for Sunday magazines, women's sections, etc. High power human interest articles, telling in Jane Burr's own way of her interesting experiences with interesting people. Announced here for the first time. All territories open. Ask for details.

W. L. GEORGE, world famed authority on feminism, writes a daily article of 300 words; ideally adapted to editorial or woman's pages. Attracting wide attention in the New York Sun, Chicago Daily News, and others. Write for samples.

Pictorial Feature Stories With Photo Mats

Put art on the front page and you sell papers! That is an axiom of the newspaper business.

Except in the big cities, getting suitable art smashes has always been difficult. This daily Pictorial News Feature in mat form, is exactly what the editor wants where local photo and engraving facilities are lacking.

Every day we send out to clients three different feature stories. One is illustrated with a 1-col. half tone mat; the second with a 2-col. mat; the third with a 3-col. mat.

You may buy the full service or any part of it, at a surprisingly low price.

Stories run from 75 to 300 words.

Write for a week's trial.

Serial Novels

"THE BITTERMEADS MYSTERY," by E. R. Punshon. An adventure tale with strong love interest.

"THE THREE BLACK PENNYS," by Joseph Hergesheimer. A classic of modern literature.

"THE HOUSE BY THE RIVER," by A. P. Herbert. A love and crime story with an English setting.

"SHOOTING STARS," by Harry C. Witwer. Each chapter is complete in itself, but all concern the adventures of a bright young man who achieves the top place in the fight ring. Love runs through the entire theme, assuring you of women readers as well as men.

Radio

"FIFTEEN MINUTES OF RADIO," by Edward N. Davis, the best fitted man in America for this subject. Supplies a daily radio corner for your paper. Questions and answers department at no extra charge. Now used by Chicago Daily News, Boston Globe, and many others.

United First-Run Fiction

Here is the most enterprising venture in syndicated first-run short stories.

The United Feature Syndicate has arranged with 52 of America's leading authors to write, exclusively for its clients, a short story. Each one will run from 3,000 to 4,500 words, and will be illustrated with a 4 column pen and ink drawing (in mat form.)

Thus you are assured of the best in American fiction, never before published, at a price you can easily afford.

First releases soon. Stories will follow at the rate of one a week.

Every author is a top-notcher. The list includes:

Booth Tarkington	Julian Street	Joseph C. Lincoln	Wallace Irwin
Gertrude Atherton	Fanny Hurst	Maud Radford Warren	Meredith Nicholson
F. Scott Fitzgerald	Charles Norris	Alice Duer Miller	Margaret Deland
Dorothy Canfield	Rupert Hughes	Theodore Dreiser	Samuel Merwin

Hollister Organization Will Solve Your 1923 Circulation Problems

C. B. HOLLISTER

THE largest and most successful circulation organization in the United States is available to a few newspapers interested in an immediate increase in circulation.

The Hollister plan—a tried and proven method of securing thousands of new, paid-in-advance home subscriptions, the only permanent kind, in a sure, dignified, and profitable way—is endorsed by leading newspapers throughout the country and used by them time and time again.

This organization will be ready to start one more Big Campaign within the next few weeks!

Over fifteen years have been spent in developing the Hollister Organization and in perfecting the details of our campaigns, until they now please the most critical and conservative of publishers and are conducted without in the least disturbing the routine or personnel of the paper. Our own specialized men do all the work, and obtain results never before dreamed of by adding thousands and thousands of subscribers within a few weeks' time.

Remember, the thousands of new subscribers that the Hollister Organization can gain for you will be worth many thousands of dollars in prestige and advertising returns. A big increase in circulation soon pays for itself.

A Few of the Many Hollister Successes

Nothing Succeeds Like Success

The high reputation of The Hollister Organization and the predominant position it holds in the newspaper world, has once again been clearly demonstrated by the fact that recently three Big Campaigns were being conducted at the same time, under the guidance of this organization.

The Three Papers Were:
THE INDIANAPOLIS NEWS
THE BALTIMORE AMERICAN
THE WASHINGTON POST

Just Starting $50,000 Atlanta (Ga.) Journal Campaign.

What Some of Our Clientele Say Regarding the Hollister Method

THE PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER—"Pronounced success. Two campaigns brought over 70,000 new paid subscribers. Results very satisfactory."—James Elverson, Jr., President & Publisher.

THE CLEVELAND PLAIN DEALER—"Hollister straightforward and able in his work for us. Were I looking for quick results would consider Hollister's service very seriously."—George M. Rogers.

THE HOUSTON POST—"Results in every particular exceeded our expectations. Absolutely satisfactory to us in every way."—Roy G. Watson, President and Publisher.

THE LOS ANGELES TIMES—"Have promoted three successful campaigns for The Times. Each successive campaign brought more than preceding one. Conducted in highly satisfactory manner."—Harry Chandler, Publisher.

THE SAN FRANCISCO CHRONICLE—"Well pleased with results of Prize Campaign for us. Reports show conclusively that campaign was conducted in thoroughly efficient manner."—M. H. DeYoung, Publisher.

THE SAN ANTONIO EXPRESS—"Was a success from the start. Your work highly satisfactory to us. Second contest also very successful in every way."—F. G. Huntress, Jr., President & General Manager.

THE INDIANAPOLIS NEWS—"Sincerely appreciate splendid work done here and the manner in which you co-operated with us. We show actual gain of 4,047 Marion county, 2,705 trading territory, 3,357 country,—a total of 10,109. Proud of results obtained."—John M. Schmid, Manager of Circulation.

THE WASHINGTON POST—"Wish to compliment you and your organization on the manner you conducted campaign for The Post. Nothing but praise for your organization."—A. D. Marks, General Manager.

THE BIRMINGHAM AGE-HERALD—"Methods used by Hollister organization excellent. 6,468 new subscribers added. You accomplished more than we expected."—E. W. Barrett, Editor & Publisher.

ake 1923 notable on your newspaper by a big paid-in-advance circula-n gain! Get the best results by securing the services of the finest and rgest circulation organization in the United States—an organization that s built up a truly great prestige and reputation by solving the circulation problems of many of the nation's greatest newspapers. Any publisher at all interested is urged to get in touch with us immediately. Until February 25 we can be reached at The Washington Post; after that date our advertisements in Editor & Publisher will furnish a guide to our current campaigns.

The ITALIAN MARKET in AMERICA

¶ ACCORDING TO THE CENSUS OF 1920 the total Italian population in the United States numbers 3,365,000.

¶ IN NEW YORK CITY ALONE THERE ARE more than 800,000 Italian speaking, Italian reading people; a population larger than that of Rome.

¶ GAIN THE CONFIDENCE OF THE ITALIAN people by talking to them in their own language.

¶ THE ITALIANS ARE THRIFTY AND INDUSTRIOUS and prospective buyers of your product if you will tell them about it in words and pictures that they understand.

¶ THEY CONSTITUTE A HOMOGENEOUS market easy to reach, easy to exploit and easy to hold, if you will employ the logical and natural means.

¶ USE THE CORRIERE D'AMERICA TO AMERICANIZE this great Italian populace and tell them about what you have to sell.

¶ THE CORRIERE D'AMERICA IS THE ILLUSTRATED Italian Daily which reaches the Italian home and is read by the whole family.

¶ EDITED BY LUIGI BARZINI, THE FAMOUS Italian journalist, the CORRIERE D'AMERICA has been conceived to achieve the widest circulation among our Italian compatriots.

¶ THE CORRIERE D'AMERICA IS PRINTED in the convenient and popular tabloid form, profusely illustrated with the latest news pictures.

¶ GIVE A SERIOUS THOUGHT TO EXPLOITING this great Italian market within our gates. Consider its tremendous buying power, of which you can take advantage only if you employ the natural medium: The Italian Newspaper.

BACK OF YOUR LINOTYPE

Leadership. From the earliest model of the Linotype to the present quick-change, multiple-magazine Text and Display Linotype, its development has always anticipated the demands of the printing industry for composing machines adapted to the highest ideals of the art.

Performance. Of the more than 45,000 Linotypes built and distributed throughout the world, some of the original models are still in successful use after more than a quarter of a century's active service.

Service. Linotype sales-offices and supply warehouses serve four-fifths of the printers and publishers throughout the world.

CHARACTER

THE Something called Character is not achieved over night or created at will. It is a structure founded and maintained by performance. No way has ever been invented to hurry it, but when it is attained it makes past achievement an enduring part of Today and a guarantor for Tomorrow. Thus no modern printer would install a Blower Machine—the First Linotype—in his shop today. But that first machine would today give service, because the purpose behind it was to make something of lasting usefulness. Each Linotype improvement has been born of the same purpose—maximum benefit to the user.

Linotype Character has thus marked Linotype Leadership.

The tale of Character is told by all of the Linotype Company's productions—

The Greatest Year for St. Louis' One Big Newspaper

During 1922 the Post-Dispatch broke every previous high record in the entire history of St. Louis journalism, by printing a Greater Volume of News and Features, by establishing a new high St. Louis Circulation Average, and by carrying the largest volume of Paid Advertising ever before concentrated in any newspaper in St. Louis.

A New High Record in News and Features

The Post-Dispatch Daily and Sunday, during 1922, printed 47,264 columns of News- and High-class Features, which established a new and hitherto unapproached standard of newspaper service to readers in the territory covered by The Post-Dispatch—exceeding any other St. Louis newspaper—morning or evening, Daily or Sunday—by hundreds of columns.

A New High Record in Paid Circulation

In both Daily and Sunday Circulation the Post-Dispatch soared far above its best previous high yearly average. The City Circulation of the Daily Post-Dispatch alone approximately equals that of the morning and one other evening newspaper combined, and is approximately 40,000 more than both other evening newspapers combined. The Circulation of the Sunday Post-Dispatch alone exceeds both other St. Louis Sunday Newspapers combined by 45,000.

A New High Record in Paid Advertising

19,881,120 Lines

The Post-Dispatch exceeded the second seven day newspaper by 7,608,720 lines and the third by 11,094,420 lines of Paid Advertising. The Post-Dispatch is the only St. Louis newspaper to show consecutive gains in 1920, 1921, and 1922. The second newspaper—the Globe-Democrat—failed to reach its 1920 record by 1,215,300 lines.

BRITISH NEWSPAPERS' CIRCULATIONS AND ADVERTISING RATES

BY courtesy of Messrs. G. Street & Co., Ltd., 30 Cornhill, London, E. C. 3, England, one of the leading Advertising Agencies in Great Britain, EDITOR & PUBLISHER is enabled to publish exclusively in the American trade press this list of 1,100 British newspapers, taken from Messrs. Street & Co.'s publication, The Advertisers' Aid.

For purposes of simplification, the tables given in the original Advertisers' Aid have been reduced to a minimum, the omissions being the series rates of 6, 13 and 52 insertions, details as to whether stereos or matrices are preferred, and remarks as to localized editions.

The list will be found of extreme value at this time in view of the increasing interest taken by American manufacturers in the British market, and will permit the ready compilation of preliminary programmes of advertising based on cost, space, the localities it is desired to cover and the industries in those territories. Messrs. G. Street & Co., Ltd., who retain the Copyright of this List in U. S. A., request EDITOR & PUBLISHER to state that readers desiring the fuller information contained in the Advertisers' Aid, can obtain it quarterly for the subscription price of $1.50 per annum, it being brought up-to-date with each quarterly issue.

To reduce the rates in this list to the American standard of agate lines it is only necessary to remember that 14 agate lines equal one inch.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS

Population is shown in brackets following the names of cities; figures following indicate local industries the key table to which will be found on this page. All circulation figures quoted are publishers' claims. DM. indicates daily morning; DE. daily evening; W. weekly; 2W, twice a week; etc. The price given is per issue. Under page sizes the first figure indicates the number of columns per page; the second, column width; the third, column depth. Letter V means size varies. Unless otherwise stated, the first column under Inch Rate indicates price for one time and the second figure is the 26-time insertion rate.

TO AMERICAN ADVERTISERS!

We have had actual experience in advertising American goods to the British Public.

CAN WE HELP YOU?

Street's are handling in Great Britain several considerable advertising campaigns for American propositions, with the success that only a wide knowledge of advertising in all its branches and a thorough understanding of conditions can bring about.

Street's are experts in media. They know the British and Overseas Press from A to Z. They can estimate to a degree of certainty the value of every great National Organ and every large and small local, in relation to the proposition in hand. They possess records of results from keyed advertisements which are of the greatest possible value.

Street's conduct campaigns from beginning to end. Media are selected and grouped, costs accurately estimated, insertions checked, claims made for errors, etc.

Street's "copy" department is thoroughly well organized on up-to-date lines and is regularly producing some of the best advertising in Great Britain.

Street's Service has accounted in no small measure for the prosperity of some of Britain's big advertisers, amongst whom are included Ronuk Floor & Furniture Polishes, Robinson's "Patent" Barley and "Patent" Groats, Price's Candles, Burgoyne's Wines, Royal Mail Steam Packet Co., Lloyds Bank Ltd., Pitman's Schools, Eastman's Dye Works, Oxo, Van Houten's Cocoa, and many others.

GET A COPY of the "Advertisers' Aid"

A valuable publication giving a mass of information and technical details regarding the newspapers of the British Isles—Populations, Circulations, Rates, Column Lengths and Widths, Local Industries.

Included are the guaranteed NET SALES of a great many publications, a very valuable feature as it enables American Advertisers, from a distance, to compare advertising costs with relation to given circulations.

Thoroughly checked and brought up to date every three months. Issued quarterly. Costs 50 cents. Enables American Advertisers to work out a skeleton campaign for England.

Then Write to STREETS of LONDON and they will help you to put the scheme into practical working order.

Street's are prepared to submit a scheme for the marketing of any American product in the British Isles, without obligation on the part of any serious enquirer. Write at once to

Shake Hands with Ulster through the pages of the Belfast Telegraph

"A progressive daily in a prosperous State"

The biggest factor in the success of any Irish Publicity scheme is the "Belfast Telegraph"—"The Key that unlocks the money chests of Ulster."

No National Campaign is complete without it; for thanks to its continuous enterprise for more than half a century this "live" Irish daily now wields a greater influence than any other newspaper published in "John Bull's other Island." It is an undisputed fact that in the prosperous North—

How to sell goods in the New York market

The first thing a manufacturer is apt to ask a New York newspaper with Merchandising Service, is "What can you do for us in New York?" That is a question no newspaper can conscientiously answer until it knows what the manufacturer wants to do in New York; how he is organized to do it and how his advertising is planned. There can be no standard plan for covering New York. The market is too enormous.

Swing a 50-mile radius around New York. That's Journal City—America's largest, richest, most responsive and most easily controlled market.

Journal City covers only 7,854 square miles of territory, but offers manufacturers 8,900,000 consumers. In area it is a dot on the map, but in population it is larger than the entire six states of New England and pays more income tax than either New England or the solid South.

Journal City is essentially a newspaper-reading market.

622,749 copies daily
of the NEW YORK EVENING JOURNAL
are bought—at 3c. a copy; 40% of the total New York evening field is covered by this one great paper alone—giving advertisers the largest daily circulation in America.

To make the selling power of this tremendous circulation even more effective, the Merchandising Service Department of the NEW YORK EVENING JOURNAL is offered without cost to assist manufacturers win their place in this market—and the method of assistance varies with every campaign—as it must.

No merchandising department is worth its weight in newsprint if it has one ready-to-use method that must be twisted to suit every campaign. It becomes merely the tag end of an advertising solicitation, instead of being as it should be, a definite and practical auxiliary to the manufacturer's own sales department.

The Merchandising Service Department of the NEW YORK EVENING JOURNAL is successful because it is the biggest in the country, is flexible and back of it has the tremendous selling power of the largest daily circulation in America.

RECORD OF WORK DONE

522,553 personal calls on retailers by JOURNAL fieldmen.

215,373 pieces of window display distributed by JOURNAL men.

78,117 trade investigation calls to ascertain market conditions.

487 market surveys made to assist agencies and sales managers.

815,000 trade papers circulated—5 great trade papers—8 and 10 pages sent free to retailers in every line—Grocery,—Drug,—Men and Women's Wear—Automotive and Household Trade News.

Health!

The Samson Clark Building was specially designed to let in the daylight and promote the health and well-being of those employed.

The firm of Samson Clark & Co., Ltd., was also built up to render you precisely the same class of service.

We can bring the daylight of enlightened publicity to bear on your selling problems in Great Britain and its connections overseas.

Our whole effort is to promote the health and well-being of your sales organization.

Will you allow us to do it for YOU? An appointment can be made either by post or over the 'phone. After an interview we will submit a sales scheme to you without putting you under any obligation whatsoever, except the courtesy of careful consideration.

The "Morning Advertiser," of London, Eng., Nov. 7th, 1922, said—"No such palace, however, as the new home for the extensive Advertising Service of Samson Clark & Co., Ltd. . . . . is likely to be in existence, anywhere else.

NEWSPAPER SERVICE
Maximilian Elser, Jr., Gen'l Mgr.
150 NASSAU ST. NEW YORK

Which road do your customers travel?

If you have goods of high quality to sell, goods in the luxury class—pearl necklaces, oriental rugs, mahogany furniture, automobiles—you are interested in the purchasing power of the constituency to which you tell the story of your wares. As purchasing power increases numbers decrease, and below a certain capacity to buy you are not interested in numbers.

For example, the 1920 census of Chicago shows that there are in this city 7,292 men and women classified as "Bankers, brokers, etc.," and 70,405 men and women classified as "Laborers" in the major industries. This latter group, in human values, is no less important than the former; but it is no discredit to its worth of character to say that from the standpoint of purchasing power it does not enter into your calculations as a merchant of goods beyond its reach.

Your appeal is to the 7,000, not the 70,000—to the smaller group, whose ability to buy is a hundredfold that of the larger. When you pay for circulation which reaches the 70,000 you are paying for something which is of no value to you. THE POST carries no dead circulation for the quality merchant. Every reader is a potential buyer. You pay only for service in your own select and fruitful field.

THE PITTSBURGH PRESS

Scored Notable GAINS

In CIRCULATION and in ADVERTISING

During the past year THE PRESS carried a total volume of advertising of nearly

22 MILLION AGATE LINES

(Exact Measurement 21,995,638 Lines)

OMITTED Nearly 3 MILLION AGATE LINES

for which orders were received, but which THE PRESS could not publish on account of printing press limitation on size of paper. Had THE PRESS published all of the advertising for which it had orders in 1922, the total volume doubtless would have placed THE PRESS first among the newspapers of United States.

Tacoma, the Lumber Capital of America

One hundred and fifty 5-room, modern homes could be built from the lumber cut in one day in the city of Tacoma, "the Lumber Capital of America."

The daily cut of the Tacoma district—centering in and marketed through Tacoma—would provide similar homes for over 350 families.

Tacoma, in the center of a tremendous lumber-producing area, offers every product of the Pacific Northwest forests—lumber, cedar shingles, fir doors, veneers, columns, millwork, wood pipe, cross arms, conduit, boxes, crates and other containers, poles and piling and wood specialties.

Tacoma manufactures more forest products than any other city in America.

Tacoma possesses the largest wooden column output in the world.

Tacoma has the largest production of fir doors and fir veneer panels of any other city in the west.

Tacoma has the largest production of furniture of any city west of Chicago.

Tacoma ships more lumber coast-wise, inter-coastal and foreign combined than any other city.

Transportation facilities are unexcelled. The city is located on four transcontinental railroads and has a deep water, protected harbor with docks and lumber handling facilities that are unsurpassed.

This great territory is served by the News Tribune, which enters more homes in Tacoma and Southwest Washington than all other outside papers combined.

The assessed valuation of the eight counties of Southwest Washington is $411,041,000. The net paid circulation of the News Tribune for 1922 (A. B. C. publisher's report) 32,255. Write for details of the service which it is prepared to offer.

More than a score of prosperous cities and towns in the suburban area.

Convenient shipping center.

A progressive, independent newspaper nationally known for its virile and aggressive editorial policy.

Believing that its readers are entitled to interpretative news of the state and nation, the Beacon Journal maintains full time bureaus at both Washington and Columbus, the state capitol, in charge of trained and experienced newspapermen.

In the local news fields the Beacon Journal is admittedly dominant.

BOSTON GLOBE FIRST

During 1922 the total number of lines of Department Store advertising printed in Boston papers having Daily and Sunday editions was

GLOBE - 3,457,099
Second Paper 2,916,732

Write Advertising Manager, Boston Globe, for information about the Boston territory.

The Globe Should Be First on Your Boston List

The 49th State is a Circle--Radius 150 mi.

GET out your map, and add this new commonwealth—right in the nation's center.

Name the new state "Globe-Democrat Influence." The capital is St. Louis. The five counties are marked in white in the diagram above.

The population of the new state exceeds 4¼ millions. The wealth is based on a wider variety of natural resources and industry than any other state can show.

One newspaper serves the 49th State. No other single paper even claims such coverage.

Can you think of a better newspaper situation than this?

—The largest daily in a wealthy district, exerting a tremendous influence throughout that district.

Any wonder we want to tell you about it?

AS TO ST. LOUIS

In most American cities you will find a newspaper that occupies a field of its own without a Sunday edition. In most instances this paper is a carefully edited, thoughtful newspaper, not given to sensationalism, having a following of readers who have the means and inclination to invest in substantial goods.

The only six-day evening paper without a Sunday edition in St. Louis is The Times, which enjoys the complete confidence of its readers, practically all of whom are in the immediate trading territory of that great and prosperous city. All of the department stores use very large space in The Times, the largest of this group alone having used last year in excess of 600,000 lines, which is quite a lot of space to use in one newspaper having no Sunday edition. The St. Louis Times is very careful of its advertising policy, co-operating with the Better Business Bureau, and seeing that this policy is made effective.

Your copy in the columns of The Times will be in good company, both personal and local.

MOUNT VERNON
NEW YORK

The wonder City of the Metropolitan Suburban District

THE HOME OF THE DAILY ARGUS

First Street at Second Avenue

The DAILY ARGUS

The only newspaper printed and published in the city, is making the same wonderful advance as has distinguished Mount Vernon in 1922.

TWO RECORDS

In 1922 Mount Vernon made a record showing in building permits—The value of the plans filed reaching the sum of $7,004,531

Also in 1922, The Daily Argus carried over 7,000,000 lines of advertising, the greatest lineage of any newspaper in Westchester county and proof of the confidence people have in its value as an advertising medium.

Mount Vernon has grown from a population of 22,000 in 15 years to nearly 50,000 today, and there is a tributary population of 50,000 more

The Daily Argus goes into nearly every home in this territory. The circulation is over 8,500 daily.

QUALITY VE

WHEN YOU HEAR

Buying a Newspaper Press other than a Hoe, you can be sure that it was either because the impelling consideration was price rather than quality or because of failure to personally investigate fully the respective merits of the different machines offered, or that the great volume of orders going through our works, coupled with our high standard of manufacture, prevented us from making delivery within the time desired.

While we have been the pioneers and leaders in the manufacture of printing machinery for over one hundred years, and have by far the largest and best equipped plant of its kind in the world, especially adapted to turning out superior machinery in the quickest and most economical manner, yet the cost of construction and the time required for manufacture are necessarily greater in the case of machinery built to our high standards of design and workmanship, than for machinery of cheaper design and inferior construction.

At the present time the extraordinary dema

Hoe Presses are designed and built to give the greatest net output and do the best work in the most efficient and economical manner — not merely to sell at a price. That they are the best investment in the long run, because of their greater speed, greater dependability, greater economy of upkeep, greater freedom from paper wastage, and longer life, is demonstrated conclusively by the continually increasing demand for them and by the fact that the majority of the prominent newspapers and magazines throughout the world are printed on Hoe Presses. The proprietors of these publications are conservative, far-seeing business men who look beyond immediate costs for efficiency and permanent value. They would not pay a higher price for Hoe Machinery unless convinced that it is a better investment from every viewpoint.

The Sun Leads All New York Evening Newspapers in Advertising Gains

DURING 1922 The Sun published 9,620,816 agate lines of advertising (32,069 columns)—an increase of 1,420,092 lines (4,734 columns) over the preceding year.

The Sun's gain was greater than the combined gain of the three other evening newspapers that increased in advertising.

The Sun's gain was 516,412 lines greater than that of the next evening newspaper.

For 10 consecutive months The Sun's gain has been larger than the gain of the next evening newspaper.

This record reflects the confidence of advertisers in The Sun—a confidence drawn from a consistently large and increasing volume of sales directly traceable to advertising in this newspaper.

EMPIRE PRESS UNION, 71 Fleet Street, London, E. C. 4. Objects: An organization of newspaper proprietors and editors of leading newspapers and periodicals published in the United Kingdom, the British Dominions and Colonies Overseas, and in India. The Empire Press Union is the only organization linking in its membership the whole of the Press of the British Empire to whose common interests it is devoted. An important part of the Union's policy is the holding of periodic conferences of Empire newspapers proprietors and editors in the United Kingdom and the overseas Dominions. The last of these conferences was held in Canada in 1920. Over one hundred newspaper proprietors and editors from all over the British Empire took part in the Conference and were entertained by the Canadian Government and the Canadian Section of the Union during a 9,000-mile tour of the Dominion. The Union has performed important work in cheapening and quickening facilities for the distribution of inter-Imperial news by cable, wireless telegraphy, and mail, and continues to exert its influence in this direction. It has separate sections in Australia, New Zealand, India, South Africa and Canada. The headquarters section in London includes in its membership practically all the London correspondents of the Press of the overseas Dominions on whose behalf it has secured important official privileges and facilities. In a word The Empire Press Union stands for unity of the British Imperial Press in all matters of common concern. Officers: President, The Rt. Hon. Viscount Burnham, C. Bought Again

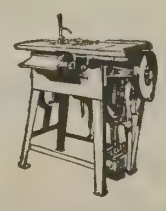
LAST April the management of the Sacramento Bee decided to start a paper in Fresno. They placed a contract for erection of a new building, and then took up the problem of its equipment.

The Fresno Bee

This gave occasion to review the field and find out what is the most approved way of getting display composition. The Sacramento Bee has been using the Ludlow method. They know what it will do. But they were not so well posted as to what other systems would do.



Reviewing the pages of other papers using keyboard machines and also those using single types, in comparison with their own, they discovered that the strength of their own display was far better.

The tendency in a newspaper composing room is to reduce all display to keyboard sizes and faces and save distribution. This keeps the display to the smaller sizes and the thin, compressed faces—because big, bold and extended faces require thicker matrices than any keyboard machine can carry. But this, of course, is sacrificing the interest of their advertisers.

After years of use at Sacramento the Ludlow was decided upon for Fresno—which is the highest tribute to the Ludlow. It was the deliberate choice of a satisfied user, who was buying new, and had the whole field to choose from.

"Our conclusion is, to get out a newspaper, to carry clean, bright looking ads, with unlimited variation in appearance, economically, one should have at least one Ludlow."—AURORA BEACON NEWS.

"The full kerned italics that can be secured by the Ludlow improve the appearance of the paper; foundry italics soon have the kerns broken under the dry mat process, but with the Ludlows we can give perfect type free from broken kerns. Our advertisers like the italics."—TOPEKA STATE JOURNAL.

Features Make Circulation

POSITIVE PROOF IN THREE NEWSPAPERS I BOUGHT

By ARTHUR BRISBANE

KOENIGSBERG, boss of the syndicates, asks me for an article to be published in CIRCULATION dealing with what I KNOW of my own knowledge about the value of the star features sold by King Features Syndicate, the exclusive news features sent by wire by Universal Service and Cosmopolitan News Service, and the leased wire report of International News Service.

I know a good deal and I can prove it to the satisfaction of any intelligent publisher.

The announcement made when I turned over the Evening Wisconsin to Mr. Hearst tells the story, for of course the growth of that newspaper was based on the features that the papers used. It wasn't done by me. I would have been the same as any other fairly good editor without those features. And it wasn't done as the Japanese say "By the virtue of the Emperor," which in this case would mean William Randolph Hearst.

When I bought the Evening Wisconsin, the price was one cent, it is now two cents.

The employes' payroll has increased 100 per cent.

Advertising and circulation receipts have more than trebled.

I have never taken from the Wisconsin News or the Washington Times which I bought and turned over to Mr. Hearst, a dollar in profits or in salary, but have enjoyed demonstrating the fact, interesting to newspaper men, that it is not difficult to double or treble the circulation of a newspaper, treble its income, add hundreds of thousands annually to its payroll, make it profitable and put its competitors in a thoughtful mood.

It was done because the features that our newspapers printed systematically and regularly, not fitfully and feebly, created the demand that means success.

To this announcement it may be added that since I bought the Washington Times, and the Milwaukee (Wisconsin) News and turned them over to Mr. Hearst, I have bought another paper and turned that over to Mr. Hearst. The "other paper" is the Detroit Times.

When I bought this newspaper it had less than 20,000 circulation and there were three evening papers in Detroit—the Times, Journal, and News.

The Times went to 65,000 circulation from less than 20,000 in a few weeks. That wasn't very hard with the features we had to use. We put in the right man, Linder whom we took from the Detroit Journal—very lucky we were to get him—Bitner whom we got from the Pittsburgh Press, again wonderfully good luck, and Mulcahy, from the New York Evening Journal—a wonder. The pressure was too great, and the Detroit Journal sold out to the News. The News absorbed the Journal in an interesting way. They got the name, and we got the Journal's circulation. They paid $1,500,000 to make that happen.

The Detroit Times now has more than 160,000 circulation, and it has that circulation because at the very beginning we used systematically, regularly, and in the right way, the features that are necessary to get circulation and to KEEP circulation after you get it.

CHURCH ADVERTISING IDEA SPREADS

by

HERBERT H. SMITH

NEWSPAPERS in England and Canada have during the past year become more largely interested in church advertising and have come for assistance to the Church Advertising Department of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World. Two British papers are using advertising suggestions put out by this department and five papers in Canada have also found the same material available. The total number of papers in the United States which have bought copy from the Church Advertising Department in the past twelve months is fifty-six.

A fact in the development of this phase of church work which would be astonishing to a group of strictly church people is that most of the men actively interested in the work of the Church Advertising Department are those who sit on Sunday in the pews. They are not ministers. The presidents of half a dozen advertising agencies are among the men who are assisting in this work in addition to advertising executives of various types of organizations and a number of men who are now serving the nation as lawmakers. In short, men like the average newspaper publisher and advertising manager are putting most of the effort behind the campaign of the A. A. C of W. to get people into the regular habit of church-going by the use of display space in newspapers.

About a year ago the Church Advertising Department offered its first series of ads. They were brought to the attention of newspaper managers through the kindness of EDITOR & PUBLISHER which donated space for weekly announcements. Series No. 1 consisted of ten general ads urging people to go to some church. These were put out at five or ten dollars according to the size of the paper, and were used by twenty-three different daily papers.

This series was followed, at the request of publishers, by another series of ten taken by a slightly larger list of newspapers. These ads were written by such men as Frank Crane, Roger Babson, Senator Arther Capper, Governor Allen of Kansas, Bruce Barton and others. This series was written around the central theme "Why I Go to Church," and the copy was signed by the authors.

This material attracted the attention of ministers in various cities and a number of papers were able to add considerably to their church advertising lineage. These ads were in most cases used in space which the publisher donated for the good of the town. The cost of mimeographing the material and writing letters concerning the series was just about met by the income from the sale of copy. It was felt, however, that a longer series of ads would best meet the requirements of many papers, so arrangements were made with the Religious Copy Service, then located at Montclair, N. J., to use material which had been prepared for a syndicate of six papers. An individual interested in the work of the department advanced money to pay the cost of printing proofs of these fifty-two ads and of circularizing newspapers. In addition to EDITOR & PUBLISHER through its weekly donation of space, the Bureau of Advertising of the newspaper publishers also cooperated generously. This third series of ads, of fifty-two pieces of copy, is now being used by twenty-three newspapers.
